Comments and Pre-Views on

"Women of The West"

By the GOVERNORS of Several Western States

"It strikes me that this publication will fill a great need. I do not think that, heretofore, just recognition has been given to the work of our outstanding women in the West. I trust this book will help to supply this lack."—HON. GEO. W. P. HUNT, Governor of Arizona.

"Many noble women have contributed their full portion to the inspiring history of the West. It is gratifying to learn they are to receive due recognition in the new publication, 'Women of the West'."—HON. H. C. BALDRIDGE, Governor of Idaho.

"I am glad to learn that accurate biographical data concerning the women of the West is to be made available by your firm. Since the days of pioneer mothers, the women of Oregon have contributed much to the progress and welfare of the state. A proper recognition of the valuable services of our women citizens is eminently desirable." —HON. I. L. PATTERSON, Governor of Oregon.

"Judging from the folder which you were good enough to send me, I believe that you are making a well worth while contribution to the literature of the West in your publication of the volume, 'Women of the West'. It is an interesting undertaking, and I wish you success."—HON. GEORGE H. DERN, Governor of Utah.

PREFACE

FOR SOME TIME PAST librarians, newspaper editors, club women, educational institutions, leading book sellers, chambers of commerce and other civic associations have expressed the need for a book containing the names of those women of the western states who have rendered special services and contributed in any way to the public welfare in their respective communities. With women's sphere of influence and activity constantly broadening, there is no doubt that a publication of this kind will find a ready welcome in a very large number of our best homes.

Complying with the urgent request for such a publication, we have, as a fitting tribute to the leading women in the western section of the United States, compiled and edited the present volume. The 1928 edition of WOMEN OF THE WEST contains approximately eleven hundred biographical sketches of those women whose activities in the civic, art, social, literary, church, school, political and business life of their community or state, have qualified them for a place in this reference work. In selecting the names, we have been guided by the advice of state and city officials, librarians, chambers of commerce, newspaper publishers, educators, and others who are familiar with local conditions and whose judgment has been considered competent and unbiased. Mere membership in clubs or societies did not serve as sufficient qualification for a place in this book. Those women who have done something of a creative, constructive or "outstanding" nature have been accorded due credit for their work. Authors, prominent teachers and school officials, women in public offices, workers in the Parent-Teachers movement, librarians, successful women in the business and professional world, those active in club and fraternal circles and all others "who have really accomplished something," have been given recognition in WOMEN OF THE WEST.

It will be readily understood that it was necessary to omit certain names. Quite a number of women should have been included in this list, but various reasons account for these omissions. Questionnaires were sent to those who had been recommended for entry, but not all of them were returned to us with the necessary information and the names had to be left out. Certain names, no doubt, were never suggested to us and they, of course, will not appear in this volume. Others who had supplied us with the required data had to be omitted, since further investigation disclosed the fact that their past or present activities would not entitle them to representation. We hope that the next edition will be complete in every respect, but we feel that the present volume, with all its unavoidable shortcomings, will fill a long-felt need.

We shall welcome suggestions for improvement in further editions. We invite those who consider themselves eligible to a place in WOMEN OF THE WEST, to communicate with us at an early date. A standard questionnaire will be sent to them upon request. If they qualify, their names will be included in the next edition.

Advertising matter does not appear in WOMEN OF THE WEST, and "write-up" material has not been solicited. Those whose biographies appear were not compelled to purchase a copy of the book. Not a line of space has been paid for.

Photographs of those who have contributed special articles to this edition, will be found in the illustrated sections preceding the various state lists.

We consider WOMEN OF THE WEST a real, up-to-date, comprehensive reference work for the following reasons: (1) the field of women's activities in the western states has never been covered before; (2) entries were made solely on merit; (3) not a line of space has been paid for; (4) eighty per cent of the eleven hundred biographies appearing on these pages, are published for the first time; (5) the arrangement is systematic, geographical by states and alphabetical by names; (6) all information contained in this issue was obtained from original and authentic sources.

We appreciate and acknowledge, herewith, the splendid cooperation and kind assistance of all those who have made it possible for us to compile this work, and we hope that it will serve its useful and well-meant purpose.

A Few of the Eminent WOMEN OF ARIZONA

1. C. Louise Boehringer, educational journalist; 2. Mattie L. Williams, Arizona State President, United Daughters of Confederacy; 3. Marie Bartlett Heard, active club and civic worker; 4. Margaret Wheeler Ross, writer; 5. Edith O. Kitt, secretary of Arizona Pioneers' Historical Society.

Women of Early Arizona

By NELLIE VON GERICHTEN SMITH
(Composer of "Montezuma")

When Coyle asked for horned toads to be placed beneath a Seattle cornerstone a few weeks ago, he received a message from Arizona to this effect: "A toad raised in Arizona climate will have enough energy to carry him through a thirty-one year fast and come out frisky." The Arizona horned toad was chosen in preference to those from other states. "Women of the West"—where were there more energetic women than the women of Arizona?

Coming here when this part of the United States was overrun by Apache Indians, who resented the white man's invasion, these women soon learned to handle a rifle. Sacrifices of all kinds were made; cooking utensile were crude; wood had to be gathered up; water for cooking and washing had to be carried often some distance, with, now and then, a stray shot from an Indian. Strange as it may seem, you talk to any pioneer out here and she will laughingly make light of their days of toil and hardships. The scenery, the air, the bigness and broadness of this wild region gave those pioneer men and women a touch of the same, no inclination for any smallness of spirit. Doctors were miles and miles away; these frontier women would act as nurses with their home remedies, generous and unselfish in every way.

In Prescott now, there are a few log cabins built from the trees which then grew in the present business street. At Miller Valley, a home is still standing where Mr. Miller then thought would be built the City of Prescott. Fort Whipple, now the Government Hospital for our late war veterans, was then the fort holding government soldiers to battle and protect these early settlers in all parts of Arizona. Imagine the vim, courage and energy of these women when their men would form troops for these nearby skirmishes. Left alone, seeing an Apache Indian sneaking up to steal a horse tethered near the house, is it any wonder we praise the bravery of the woman who thinks quickly enough to grab her rifle and either shoots—or scares him away? California has many noble pioneer women, but in Arizona, soil and air dry, climate warmer, water at long distance, the struggle for existence required independence, firmness, courage and energy.

Too much cannot be said for the real pioneer women of the West. Arizona is the only state in the Union that has a home built and maintained for its pioneers, both men and women. All credit to the publishers who are editing the book dedicated to the "Women of the West"!

Arizona Women

By C. LOUISE BOEHRINGER
(Editorial Writer)

Arizona women have played and are still playing a part on the stage of the great American frontier. Women in the very prime of social, professional and business life of Today's Arizona, recall exciting childhood days when their pioneer mothers helped build and defend the first homes in mining camps, on the ranges and in the fertile valleys. A number of these brave mothers and grandmothers now assemble annually for pioneers' reunions.

Their pioneer daughters have been joined by many others who have come from every part of the country, and who have lingered to play a part in the development of this scenic state —the last to add her star to the galaxy that represents the Union. With the admission to statehood on St. Valentine's Day in 1912, a larger stage opened to Arizona women. Executive educational offices opened for them, and they found a work to do in legislative halls. To date, the State Senate has enrolled one woman and the Assembly roll presents ten names of women. Two women have also filled state offices with credit to the womanhood of the state. Able teachers, lawyers, physicians and business women are all a part of Arizona's present development.

Now that the material frontier has practically disappeared, new frontiers loom above the horizon—social and spiritual frontiers—affording a stage for larger recognition for "human engineers," for finer artisans and for those with creative ability in literature, in art and in music.

With the passing of Arizona's sixteenth birthday comes a new challenge to her women—one rich in spiritual values—leading from adolescent struggle into a rich flowering of opportunity for Arizona's womanhood.

The Making of the Arizona Flag

By MATTIE L. WILLIAMS
(President, Arizona State Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy)

Why didn't some woman like Betsy Ross arise to the occasion and design our Arizona Flag? Or why didn't the Legislature at some time offer a design for our Arizona Flag?

The Arizona Rifle Team to the National Matches met at Camp Perry in 1910. Adjutant General Chas. W. Harris felt very keenly the fact that Arizona was without an emblem. It was no easy matter to design a flag that would be both attractive and have historical value. Adjutant General Harris met the occasion and designed the flag that is known today as our Arizona State Flag.

In the making of the flag, he first considered the historical value of the flag. Then, he took into consideration the colors—Arizona State colors were blue and gold and so far as known, these colors had no history. The old Spanish colors were red and gold. The colors had a historical value, being the colors carried by the Coronado Column, which was the first expedition into the territory at present covered by the continental limits of the United States.

It was in the mind of Adjutant General Harris that Arizona had stood out distinctive in its copper industry—probably will always be the largest copper producing state in the Union—so he would have the yellow to represent the copper industry.

In our United States Flag, every star represents a certain state. As Arizona was the last state to be admitted in the continental limits of the United States, the last star in the United States Flag represents Arizona, and the fact that Arizona was a western state, Adjutant General Harris well considered to use the setting sun, and—from the original colors, he used thirteen rays, showing Arizona's relation to the Mother Flag.

In Adjutant General Harris' own words, he says: "The Flag represents the following—the setting sun, consisting of thirteen rays, alternate red and yellow, or red and gold, in the upper half of the flag, the lower half being plain blue field, superimposed upon the center of the flag. In the face of the setting sun is the copper colored star of Arizona. The flag in this way carries the state colors, the old Spanish colors and the distinctive copper colors of Arizona."

This flag has been adopted by the State of Arizona and, when first designed, had a bar entirely across the copper star indicating our Indian wars. Because this was thought by the legislature to detract from the symmetry or design of the flag, the bar was taken off, but it was otherwise left as originally designed. So, we of the Baby State, are indebted to Adjutant General Charles W. Harris for this beautiful, distinctive flag.

Woman's Supreme Achievement

By REV. NONA L. BROOKS
(Denver, Colo.)

As the years pass I appreciate more and more the powerful influence women may have in the world affairs as well as in closer experiences. More and more do I see the power of motherhood to make the world what it should be. Therefore, the word I send in response to the request made of me, will be to the mothers of today. The welfare of the world depends upon mothers. Motherhood is the most important and intriguing work in which a woman can engage. It is also a business that requires the best in one: time, knowledge, love, wisdom, wide vision, consecration. Women potentially possess all of these qualities and are capable of developing them to high proficiency.

The withdrawal from outer demands in order to have time to give one's best to this most important activity, motherhood, pays full dividends. Only a few years are required, fifteen or twenty perhaps; and they should be the very richest period of a woman's life. Afterwards there may come much that is attractive and desirable in outside demands, but nothing so satisfying as the work done quietly at home in the training of children to become grown-ups of fine calibre, who take their place in the city and country as men and women of power.

There are many tragedies in the business and politics of our day which will not be righted until there come human beings of integrity, of altruistic outlook, of keen perception and consecration. The home is the place of training, of preparation for world service. The mother is the all-powerful influence in the child's life. The child's first eight or ten years are the most important. At this time his character is being formed, his tastes developed, his future power for good or ill determined.

As you mothers know, your influence begins before the child's birth. You are the molders of your child. From your example as well as from your work with him, he will come to understand that he is a member of the great human family; that he has his part to play, his service to render; that as he plays his part well, he is fulfilling the purpose of his existence. It is during these early years that the spiritual quality of the child is developed; he is thus led to richnesss of the inner life—in which alone is true satisfaction.

Although I have been in public life for thirty-eight years and realize the influence for good one may exercise when dealing with large bodies of people, yet my conviction steadily deepens that woman's highest service, her greatest influence for the future, is in the home. When I meet a woman who is a good wife and mother, something within me bows in reverence to her, for there is no greater work, no higher position, than to be a real homemaker; nothing that counts so effectively for the welfare of the future.

The world needs your children, Mothers—children trained by you to stand, in the midst of the world's turmoil, for principle and right; who among the self-seeking mass have a larger vision—the good of the whole. Through your children, the outcome of your consecration, love and wisdom, the tragedies of business and politics, the wrongs of the social life, may be overcome and the world become a fair and harmonious dwelling place for the children of men.

In motherhood and home-making lies woman's most effective world service, her most powerful influence for good, her richest, most satisfying life—her supreme achievement.

The Pioneer Women of California

By Mariana Bertola, M. D.
(Past General Federation Director of California Federation of Women's Clubs)

The pioneer mothers of California were a hardy race; they came from the East over three thousand miles with covered wagons drawn by oxen; they rounded Cape Horn in sailing vessels, taking from three to six months to make the perilous journey; they crossed the Panama on mule-back, enduring many hardships, finally to embark on sailing vessels coming north. They were of many nationalities—Irish, English, Italian, French, Spanish and German predominating. They laid the foundation of a sturdy commonwealth. This article cannot go into details and must content itself with a meager account, as compared to the rich history that one might write. Our women have been prominent in many fields, music, poetry, prose, history, teaching, the practice of medicine, the practice of law, farming, business pursuits, such as banking, reporting, printing, publishing, stenography, buying for large houses, typewriting; social welfare workers, nurses, railroad owners and, last but not least, good housekeepers and fine mothers.

Mrs. Susan Lincoln Mills, graduate from Mt. Holyoke under Mary Lyon, missionary to India, a founder of Oahu College, Hawaiian Islands, and a founder of Mills College, Oakland, was an outstanding, big-hearted woman, building for education and for better living. Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt is her worthy successor, occupying a prominent position in the educational world.

Mrs. Phoebe Apperson Hearst was one of our most far-seeing women. She maintained the North Beach Kindergarten for years. Her great philanthropy was always well directed and kindly given in scholarships at University of California and many other projects.

Mrs. Jane Lathrop Stanford, a founder of Stanford University, was a fond mother and a woman of broad vision.

Ina Coolbrith was a poet recognized by the State officially and by the world generally.

Dr. Lucy Wanzer, hardy veteran in medicine, still occupies an envied position in her profession.

Dr. Charlotte Blake Brown and Dr. Follansbee, pioneers in medicine, have joined the Great Majority, but their work lives after them.

'Twere folly to mention the prominent women of the day, lest I leave out some, as the list is long. Suffice it to say, that California is proud of her daughters, and it is a pride not arrogant, but based on true merit.

Jane Lathrop Stanford

By JESSIE KNIGHT JORDAN (MRS. DAVID STARR JORDAN)
(Stanford University)

In all phases of progressive efforts, one finds the women of California well to the front. If now we present an outstanding figure in a limited group, it is because with the flight of years, those who knew Jane Lathrop Stanford are, one by one, rapidly passing from the stage. Even among them, also, were many who never fully realized her vital contribution to the world.

Born in 1828 and married in 1850, in Albany, New York, to a young lawyer of marked promise and integrity, as Mrs. Leland Stanford, she lived a life of steadily increasing interest and richness. From 1861 on, Mr. Stanford's political career, first as War Governor of California, and later, as senator from his state at Washington, made her sharer in affairs of import, both local and national. Wifehood and motherhood, nevertheless, she regarded always as the supreme experiences of womankind. Yet, when the loss of her husband in 1893 threw upon her shoulders a wholly unaccustomed burden of enormous magnitude—when the institution they had founded in grief, in memory of their only child, a son, dead on the threshold of manhood, seemed jeapordized to the point of extinction by financial complexities—this mid-Victorian wife and mother began to display a keenness of judgment, business acumen and determination, astonishing to the few familiar with her conduct of affairs. As surviving founder of Stanford University, by heroic personal effort of many kinds, she then succeeded in ensuring to California a benefaction of incalculable value. The story of this lone struggle cannot here be told.* But it should perhaps be added, that even in the darkest hours of those six years of unjust and cramping litigation, she waited on her God, to whose support she humbly ascribed the final victory. Indeed, not even the briefest discussion of Jane Lathrop Stanford's life would be complete without a reference to her deep and abiding religious faith.

The Women of the West

By MINNA MCGAULEY
(Trustee of Oakland Free Library and Oakland Museum)

The call in the past of the pioneer to his helpmate, and her loving and sturdy willingness to co-operate, have developed in the women of the West a mind and body that think and act spiritually and fearlessly. She has remained true to her feminine inspiration and vision. The things that she understood best were the tasks man encouraged her to undertake. To these tasks the Western Women brought, as a part of their domestic understanding, a keen interest in civic and community affairs, which is only a larger vision of the home; even before the vote enabled them to participate politically or economically.

The pioneer atmosphere has produced a generation of women who have no fear of the hazards of the unknown. In this greater freedom of the West she has capitalized her powers and broadened woman-made conventions and enabled each to develop for herself greater resourcefulness and individuality. Only a single generation separates the women of California today from the women who made the overland journey, and yet, they have exerted powerful and far-reaching influence in directing legislation for political and social reform. California was the sixth state to grant full suffrage to women. The eight-hour law for women in industry was adopted the same year. The Industrial Welfare Commission is headed by a woman. In the presidential election of 1924, sixty-eight per cent of the million and a quarter voters in California that went to the polls were women.

The history of the West is replete with the outstanding accomplishments of her womankind, artistically, industrially, commercially and politically. The very spirit of this highly favored Land of the Pacific fosters the development of art, music and drama and has inspired the creative and appreciative ability of its women.

The influence of California's women in building up the great educational system of the State has enabled it to rank among the first in the country. California has the highest percentage of enrollment in high schools; of expenditure per school child; and is exceeded by only the four large states of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois in actual amount of expenditure for education.

In literature the work of the women of the West has won wide recognition. California's beloved Poet Laureate is only one of the many women in California whose literary work has achieved lasting fame. In law, medicine and business, as well as in statesmanship, they occupy national positions. And so on, their story would require unlimited time and space in the telling. The pages of our western history, past and in the making, are filled with the names of notable women.

As a group-venture and because of its unique scheme of financing, the magnificent Western Women's Club building in San Francisco, dedicated to the Womanhood of the West, conceived and built by women for women, costing one million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, is an outstanding civic and business venture. There, a minimum of two thousand enter its doors daily; club members number over nine thousand, and, together with membership of the tenant organizations, represent over twenty-five thousand women dedicating themselves daily to the welfare, betterment and happiness of humanity.

The western woman, like the wise physician, has her finger on the popular pulse of national as well as international affairs.

Patriots, imbued with and loyal to America's spirit of freedom—history shows that the women of our American civilization, moving westward, recognized a duty in evolving their own enfranchisement, an ddrew ever for their inspiration on the courage of the first settlers of America whence came the projectile force of achievement in this our commonwealth.

The spirit of the pioneer found written in hardships and cradled by the freedom of America, has been faithfully helped on by women, and their achievements stand today as a monument to the power of their faith and service and a heritage to the coming generations of the West.

Activities of the University Women of California

By MRS. HARRY KLUEGEL
(B. S., University of California)

Forty-two years ago, the San Francisco Bay Branch of the American Association of University Women was organized as a California Branch of the American Collegiate Association. The Boston Branch, only, is older, having been organized in 1882. For a long time, it was the only organization in California for university women. Many of the founders are still living in the Bay region and all have been women of achievement. Among the number are Mrs. Alexander Morrison, Dr. Emma Sutro Merritt, Mrs. William Keith, Dr. Milicent Shinn and Mrs. Warren Cheeney. These women believed that "education is the very foundation of civic strength and uprightness" and, as a consequence, this branch has been a force in California in providing and initiating forward movements in education and in procuring opportunities for women in higher education.

The appointment of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst as the first woman Regent of the University of California, was the result of the efforts of this branch.

The American Association of University Women, a constituent member of the International Federation of University Women, is an association whose purpose is "the interesting of alumnae of different institutions for practical educational work—in general, for the maintenance of high standards in education." The major activities fall under three heads: (1) educational opportunities; (2) international relations; (3) wider professional opportunities for women. California has had two national presidents: Mrs. Alexander Morrison and Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt. Mrs. Arthur Heineman is the director for the South Pacific Section and Miss Edna Stangland, the California State president.

The California State Division, of which Mrs. Edward B. Stanwood was the first president, has organized branches throughout the state dedicated to the educational welfare of the country. Opportunities are given the members to inform themselves regarding principles and movements in education, and in the application of these programs to their local conditions. The national study projects have been made possible since 1922, by the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial and the Carnegie Corporation. Discussion groups are organized in each branch on pre-school education, elementary education and adolescent education.

Notable work has been done, among other branches, by the San Francisco Bay Branch, under the leadership of Mrs. J. R. McDonald in the Department of Child Welfare and Parent Education, and in the East Bay Branch, where a Nursery School has been established by Mrs. Paul Taylor, and in the Sacramento and Fresno Branches, in providing scholarships. In the spring of 1927, the San Francisco Bay Branch initiated a series of lectures and discussions under the chairmanship of Dean Katharine Adams of Mills College, inviting state-wide participation. The general subject being, "Present Day Trends in Higher Education."

In December, 1926, the Southern California Conference on Modern Parenthood was held for four days, in which the Los Angeles Branch was one of the cooperating organizations.

The Baby Hygiene Committee, organized nearly twenty years ago by Mrs. A. E. Graupner, has pioneered in the establishment of clinics for the welfare of children and the education of mothers. Dr. Adelaide Brown, Dr. Florence Holsclaw and Dr. Edna Bailey have been the leaders in this program.

The California State Division has been a prominent organization in working for the reorganization of the California State Department of Education, for the ratification of the Child Labor Amendment by California, and for the extension by Congress of the Infancy and Maternity Act. Mrs. A. E. Graupner represented the National Association in Washington, rendering valuable service in securing final action. Mrs. Arthur Heineman, Mrs. Jessie Steinhart and Mrs. Mary Roberts Coolidge are members of the State Board of Education.

The survey of the San Francisco school system resulting in a complete reorganization, was sponsored by the San Francisco Bay Branch under the leadership of Mrs. Jessie Steinhart and Mrs. A. E. Graupner.

The National Association is engaged in an extensive program of fellowships, which makes research possible for women of ability. Believing with the Secretary on Intellectual Cooperation of the League of Nations, that "The problem of education in international relations is the fundamental problem of the world," the South Pacific Section and the California State Division, meeting in conference at Mills College in June, 1926, passed the following resolution: "That the Fellowship Committee of the A.A.U.W. be asked that a fellowship be given an American woman to study in Japan." It was the sense of the group that the woman be a Californian.

Branches throughout the state are engaged in study and discussion groups, dedicating themselves to those problems with which California is intimately concerned, namely, problems of the Pacific and Latin-America, particularly Mexico. The state is actively cooperating with the "Million Dollar Fellowship Endowment" of the International Federation. Dr. Aurelia Reinhardt is the National Chairman of International Relations, and Dr. Esther Caukins, residing in Washington, is the National Secretary. Mrs. Malbone Graham is the State Chairman.

University women of California are occupying places of distinction in the professions, public service, politics and the arts. Among many others, are found the following: Mrs. Herbert Hoover, co-author with her husband, of a scientific treatise on mining, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Vernon Kellogg, writer and lecturer, Washington, D. C.; Dr. Aurelia Reinhardt, President, Mills College; Mrs. W. W. Campbell, wife of President Campbell, University of California; Mrs. Ray Lyman Wilbur, wife of President Wilbur of Stanford University; Mrs. George Gerlinger, Regent, University of Oregon; Mrs. Alexander Morrison, vice-president, University of California Alumni Association; Mrs. Robert Burdette, trustee, Mills College; Mrs. Thomas Mitchell Potter, trustee, Mills College; Dr. Jessica Peixotto, Professor of Social Economics, University of California; Mrs. Mary Roberts Coolidge, professor and author (Social Economics); Miss Lucy Stebbins, Dean of Women, University of California; Miss Mary Yost, Dean of Women, Stanford University; Miss Katherine Adams, Dean of Women, Mills College; Miss Maude Landis, Director of School of Nursing, Stanford University; Miss Edna Stangland, Director of Adult Education, State of California; Mrs. Jessie Steinhart, member of State Board of Education; Mrs. E. J. Mott, member of San Francisco Board of Education and Regional Director, National League of Women Voters; Mrs. Susan M. Dorsey, Superintendent of Schools, Los Angeles, and the first woman to receive the degree of LL. D. from the University of California; Mrs. Julius Kahn, Member of Congress, Fourth District, California; Mrs. Annette Adams, first Assistant Attorney-General for the United States; Miss Esto Broughton, member of California State Board of Health; Miss Ethel Whitmire, journalist; Miss Clotilde Grunsky, magazine editor; Mrs. W. W. Green, President, California Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Chas. F. Turner, President, Friday Morning Club of Los Angeles; Miss Annie Florence Brown, retiring President, Oakland Forum, and former member of Oakland Board of Education; Miss Ruth Turner, President, San Francisco Center, National League of Women Voters; Mrs. Frederick Athearn, President, Berkeley Women's City Club, and Mrs. Alfred McLaughlin, member of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

In the Field of Service

By DR. MAUD WILDE
(Founder of Mothers' Educational Center,
Los Angeles, Calif.)

Humanizing social service work has been the keynote of the women of Southern California. Long before the advent of suffrage there was a recognized need for many changes in governmental affairs, through which the masses of women and children could be benefited.

Legislative work embracing both the state laws and local ordinances received much thought and effort with the concomitant result of improved conditions.

Through the medium of the four large national organizations, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Parent-Teachers Association, and the League of Woman Voters, there has been carried forward a continuous program of education and promotion of better things for the entire state. Notable amongst these which have found expression in actual service, was the establishment of a Mothers' Educational Center, the only one in America where mothers are instructed in the fine art of home making, where their babies receive supervision in growth, diet, habit formation and character building under a staff of highly trained physicians and educators.

The Maternity Cottage, which deals with the "Oldest Industry in the World," makes it possible for babies of married women, financially embarrassed, to receive scientific care at birth, thus giving them a right start in life.

The Music House Settlement gives the talented child the opportunity to develop his genius, that the world may be happier and he may earn his livelihood.

The Orthopaedic Hospital School is an institution where the crippled child may not only have his twisted body straightened, but receive an education while the rebuilding process is going on.

The Children's Hospital gives the children of the poor the same care and treatment which the more favored child receives in a high-priced institution.

These activities are but the landmarks along the way. Between them is a vast field in which every endeavor which will enhance the lives of little children and create a social equity to relieve want, waste, and ignorance is pursued with dynamic vigor by the organized womanhood of Southern California.

Political activity by the women in California is doubtless the same as in all other states where suffrage prevails. Very early in our campaigns, it was evidenced that "off-color" political activity, whether practiced for personal aggrandizement or monetary gain, was not a matter of sex, but rather an intelligence performance plane upon which certain members of both sexes function. The watchfulness of the women of character and training directing the various activities, has built for fine ideals, making the general tone of woman's activity second to none in achievement and moral cleanliness.

Chipeta

By LILIAN WHITE SPENCER
(Writer of verse and well known journalist)

Since mine is the happy privilege of contributing a brief word-picture to the shining gallery of Colorado's eminent women, I choose, as subject, one who stands at the threshold of our state history, Chipeta, whose story is a tragic poem in red and white.

She was of the Utes, that proud Rocky Mountain tribe, and the cherished wife of their wise and famous chief, Ouray, "the Arrow," who held out an unflinching hand of brotherhood to pioneers and doom:

This Moses of high summits led his braves
Out of free ages to captivity.
"They come as mighty waters, sons," said he,
"And desert sands are less. All men are slaves
To fate, that buries us in rising waves
Of these pale tribes. So, let their chieftain be Our great White Father too! What matter? We Are dead and strangers trample on our graves."

There is no fairer romance than the idyl of Chipeta and Ouray. She was seventeen and he, twenty-six, when the white man's shadow fell upon these wedded lovers in 1859. They walked together through darkening days till he died in her arms in 1880.

During those twenty years, Ouray protected the settlers from his own people, who were restive under the inevitable, negotiated a treaty with the government and was received with the honors due a statesman at Washington. His portrait hangs beside illustrious white heroes of the early Colorado days in the State Capitol at Denver.

During the cruel times of adjustment, Chipeta was always at his side. They were one through supreme sorrow as well as mighty love. In 1863, while following the run of buffalo, they camped on the plains close to the foothills. Their baby son and only child was swinging in his sheepskin-lined, lattice-board cradle, outside their tepee when he was stolen by members of an enemy tribe. It is believed that the infant was brought up by his kidnappers as their own and, no doubt, in later life, went on the warpath against the Utes, but Chi-peta and Ouray always maintained that their little Loquito was dead. To them, this thought was less terrible.

In 1879, at a time when their chief was not by to curb and counsel, a band of enraged Utes fell upon an Indian agent, Nathan Meeker, at his post, massacred him and all the other white men there and dragged the women and the three-year-old child of one of them off into the hills. Ouray heard of it. He was a sick man but his wife was still young and strong. At his command, she rode swiftly through that savage country bearing their chief's orders to his murderous braves to release the Meeker survivors and to leave the warpath. They dared not disobey. When those suffering women and the baby were brought to Chipeta and Ouray in their comfortable cabin far above the plains, they were received with sympathy by their host and by their hostess, with tears. Chipeta fed, clothed and comforted them and the little one was mothered by her aching heart. Red and white wept together till the latter were restored to their own people.

Eugene Field wrote a poem, "Chipeta's Ride," celebrating this gallant deed of an alien woman for her sisters of the usurping race.

Chipeta's lonely path was hard and long. She saw the day of the Utes depart forever and thanked the Christian God, Whom she and Ouray had received with His people, that her dear one had been spared this bitter sunset. Through nearly half a century of widowhood, Ouray slept in a secret place, that no disrespect might ever visit his tomb. His grave was unknown to all but the few brother-chiefs who had left him there.

The years went on and on, for Chipeta, in poverty, in age, in neglect till, on a reservation to the southwest, in August, 1924, what was once a queen of warriors and now, a withered, weary, forgotten squaw of eighty, reached the end of the trail.

Then, the white people remembered. Much honor was paid to that bit of Indian clay. She was interred with ceremony and encomium in the reservation cemetery at Ignacio. In the minds of Coloradans, the nobility of Ouray, the goodness of Chipeta, lived again. The commonwealth was ashamed. The state legislature appropriated a thousand dollars for a monument to their memory.

This granite tribute was unveiled by the Daughters of the American Revolution (who had already made a gracious commemoration of their own) in May, 1927, above their united dust.

For the grateful recognition paid to dead Chipeta, belated though it was, melted the reserve of a brother, the last on earth of Ouray's funeral train. The old chief led the way to his grave and reverent white men brought his bones to rest beside his wife.

There was splendor in Ignacio that day. Several thousand white men and women were present and Utes, Navajos, and Apaches, in the regalia of glory that had passed, performed colorful rites. Their chants mingled with Christian prayers. They danced, as in the old years, to the old, old red gods, to honor the father of the Utes and his beloved, who, at last, in death as in life, were again side by side.

Mesa Verde National Park

By VIRGINIA DONAGHE MCCLURG
(Regent General of the Colorado Cliff Dwellings Association)

The movement which made Mesa Verde a National Park, containing "the most spectacular and representative area of cliff-dwellings known" (according to Dr. J. Walter Fewkes of the Bureau of Ethnology), had its inception in the visit of a young woman correspondent of the New York Daily Graphic to the ruins of Mancos Cañon, Mesa Verde, in 1882.

With the accounts of the Government Expeditions (Holmes) published in '75-'76, and Frank Cushing at Zuni, establishing the links which bound the vanished people to the race of Pueblo Indians, the world was beginning to realize that in and on mesas of the southwest United States, the phase of life which scientists call "middle barbarism" could be studied in its entirety, especially on the green tableland, honeycombed with side cañons, where were clustered cliff-homes, like swallows' nests over the precipices. For here, the Age of Polished Stone lingered long.

As there was an Indian uprising, the trip of the correspondent was undertaken under special escort of United States soldiers. Sandal House on the Mancos river, the watchtower of Navajo Cañon and some minor ruins were explored. "From that day to this, Mrs. Gilbert McClurg's interest in Mesa Verde has never flagged, and that Colorado, today, is in proud possession of this National Park is due in largest measure to her patient, continued and self-changing work, covering a quarter of a century."—(Denver Times.)

In 1886, Miss Donaghé (now Mrs. McClurg) fitted out her own expedition, consisting, besides herself, of a guide, photographer, companion-housekeeper, pack animals and saddle horses. Driven from the Mancos river by Indians, the party camped three weeks in Cliff Cañon. Here were discovered, in climbing from below, the "Three-Tiered House," "Echo Cliff House" and "Balcony House," as the explorers named them; Balcony House was found Oct. 4, 1886. In a subterranean room, was the only cliff-dwellers' loom as yet discovered in Situ.

In October, 1897, the Colorado Cliff Dwellings Association came into being, as a committee of the Colorado State Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Gilbert McClurg, chairman, incorporated in 1900, with chapters also in New York and California.

Mesa Verde was made a National Park by Act of Congress, approved June 9, 1906,—the crystallization of a quarter of a century of woman's work. When the government was at last stirred to action, the boundaries of its selected lands did not include the ruin area. The women of the Association again rallied and through their influence, was passed by Congress what is popularly known as the Brooks-Leupp Amendment, providing for safety of the ruins.

Some of the labors and achievements of the Colorado Cliff Dwellings Association include:

The first practical map of Mesa Verde made at the instance and expense of that body; the first wagon-road through the cañon; the trip of anthropologists (of the American Association for the Advancement of Science) as their guests, September 4 to 7, 1901, to interest scientists in the field—Dr. and Mrs. J. Walter Fewkes thus made their first trip as the Association's guests; inducing visits to Mesa Verde of men prominent in political life, to arouse national interest; at Spruce Tree House, the opening of the present Hammond Spring by dynamite, making the water supply accessible; a lease from the Weeminuche Utés (negotiated by Mrs. McClurg as special Indian Commissioner, under Commissioner Jones), for the land on which the ruins stand,—devised as a temporary means of protection from squatters; unceasing propaganda by means of pictures, books, newspapers and magazine articles, Indian music, relic displays and approximately a thousand lectures; influencing Congress for the bills appropriating $1,000 for the first survey of Mesa Verde and $7,500 for first improvements; September 4, 1917, presenting a pageant at Spruce Tree House, "The Marriage of the Dawn and the Moon"; repairing "Balcony House" (at the Association's expense of $1000.) which, as Director Edgar Hewitt of the Archaeological Institute of America said: "is a splendid ruin which will stand for all time as a monument to the patriotism of the Colorado Cliff Dwellings Association."

Women in Music

By CATHARINE E. VAN VALKENBURG
(Chairman, Division of Music, Idaho Federation of Women's Clubs)

From the very beginnings of music, back of every musical impulse is found a woman. Every lullaby was heard in some mother's arms, be she savage or civilized, every love song had its inception in the feeling of one man for one woman. The reveries are but recollections of evenings within the home circle and the war songs, just a challenge against the invader who would desecrate that home. If we read the lives of the great composers, we cannot fail to be impressed by the influence of some woman in each life.

Bach's second wife was the youngest daughter of a court musician, and fifteen years younger than the composer. Though they had but sixty-five dollars a year, their union has been described as the happiest in musical history, because through her encouragement, Bach touched the heights in composition and then paid his tribute by signing his manuscripts, "To God and my wife."

Handel opened his heart to no woman but his mother, and to her he dedicated the loftiest of his works.

Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata" was inspired by his love for one of his pupils, whose parents forced her to marry a wealthy count.

Every composition of Mozart's written after his marriage to Constance Weber, shows the influence of her love. He says: "She brightened all my days with her loving care and all of my music with her cheerfulness through poverty. She took care of my health and spurred me on to fulfill my engagements. How small a return my poor music is."

Now let us come to our own music. I want to tell you the story of the American Musical Clubs as I have gathered it from the journals of our pioneer club musicians.

First, the question, "Why belong to a musical club?" The answer, "No man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself." The desire to join one's individual efforts to those of the group is as old as the race. The tribal unit has been recognized in all savage life and even insects, birds and beasts centralize for safety and efficiency, so the musical people of early America sought others of like talents and the first result was the old-fashioned singing school, which began about 1717 in New England. A direct outgrowth of the singing school was the musical convention which flourished through the last half of the nineteenth century and which finally gave place to the musical clubs.

The earliest women's musical clubs were: The St. Cecelia Club of Grand Rapids, Michigan; The Union Music Club of St. Louis; The Fortnightly Club of Cleveland; The Tuesday Musical Club of St. Paul; The Amateur Musicians of Chicago; The Tuesday Club of Akron, Ohio; The Matinee Musical of Indianapolis and The Mendelssohn Club of Rockford, Illinois. These clubs are all in existence at the present time.

The National Federation of Musical Clubs was effected in 1897 through the influence of Mrs. Russell Dorr, Miss Marion Ralston and Mrs. Chandler Starr of New York. Mrs. Edwin F. Uhl of Grand Rapids, Michigan, was the first president, with Mrs. Theodore Thomas, wife of the famous conductor, as honorary president.

To tell the work of these women is too lengthy a story, but we may touch briefly upon their aims and accomplishments. Their slogan is: "Music in every state, city, town and home in America."

To this end they annually offer prizes for amateur compositions; they compile musical programs with phonograph records which may be had for the cost of express or mail only, for the use of clubs, schools and churches, in small communities. These programs always include an excellent and authentic paper on the music sent.

They award scholarships in conservatories as prizes in musical memory contests.

Through their efforts, the pupils of the accredited private music teacher of today receive credit for their work. And finally, they preached music, sang music, played and talked music, until the world was forced to listen.

Why should club women, in particular, sponsor its development?

It is a widely known fact that there is a section of every human brain devoted specifically to music. All of us try at some time to express ourselves musically, whether it be to play, sing, whistle, or even mark time. Have any of you ever tried to play any instrument while angry? It can't be done. Have you ever seen a frown on the face of a whistling boy? Of course not. Where there is music, there is peace and harmony that fill the mind, leaving no room for bitterness, jealousy, or kindred evils.

The mayor of a large eastern city had this to say to the convention of Federated Music Teachers: "I believe you are second in importance only to the clergy of our city, because I feel that music is next to religion in the uplifting of human souls."

Mr. Robert Laurence, for three years song leader at Sing Sing, says that during the entire time of his service in musical work at this great New York prison, it was impossible to find among the inmates a pianist good enough to play ordinary accompaniments well. The situation was so amusing that a sign was hung in one of the corridors bearing this inscription: "Study piano and dodge the hoosgow" and one of the inmates wrote a letter to the district judge requesting that if a good pianist was ever brought up for sentence to give him life.

Very little musical effort is ever really wasted. If you will share your community song book, your church hymn book, your phonograph or radio with the neighbor you can't quite understand, you will soon be exchanging favorite recipes, flower bulbs, dress patterns and home remedies.

Why should women, in particular, sponsor the study and development of music in the community?

We women of today are the mothers of the Bachs and Mozarts of the future. Let us teach our children good music, encourage it in our community and keep our lives and theirs full of harmony.

Do you know—

"I am the laughter of children's voices; I am the joy of early youth; I am the pleasure and recreation of busy middle age; I am the peace and comfort of life's sunset; I am the lullaby at the cradle and the hymn of God's eternal peace at the grave. I am Music."

Pioneer Women of Idaho

By Irene Welch Grissom
(Author of "A Daughter of the Northwest")

The people of Idaho have a rich heritage on which to build their cultural life.

Across the silver screen of the past vivid and picturesque figures move in quick succession. The Indian, trader, United States soldier, trapper, prospector and cowboy swing into sight and disappear to make way for the covered wagon.

Here is the beginning of family life in the new land. Beside the wagon strides a stalwart man, children laugh and call in its depths, on the seat is a woman, looking out on the frontier plain with grave, courageous eyes.

Presently the wagon halts and the man, sweeping the country with a keen gaze, says simply:

"This is the place. Here we will make our home."

Silently the woman descends from the wagon and stands beside him.

The children hush their voices, awed for the moment by the sense of a tremendous crisis.

What does she see, this gallant pioneer woman?

Burning under the heat of summer's sun, a vast, sage-clad desert sweeps away to the wide horizon. In the appalling stillness, it is as if the sound of a human voice had never broken the heated silence.

Rank clumps of sagebrush, gray with dust, stir idly in the hot wind, that comes and goes in sudden, fitful gusts. Far overhead an eagle soars, the only visible life in all the arid, empty waste.

"When this soil is irrigated," the man says slowly, "it produces in abundance almost past belief. We'll clear the sagebrush, put up a shack and get the ditches made this season. We'll water from the Snake River. Another spring we'll be ready to start farming."

"It's a big task," the woman's face is grim and resolute, "but we can do it."

Into her dauntless eyes flashes the light of prophecy.

"We'll make the desert blossom as a rose!"

Her clear voice rings like a trumpet's call.

How well the people of the covered wagon era accomplished their task of starting the great work of reclamation is told today in the vast green areas, watered by an intricate network of silver streams, that replace the barren, sage-clad waste.

Fair cities lift a skyline against the glorious sunset skies. Above the deep green of trees, church spires rise to greet morning light, and splendid schools give the children the finest educational advantages possible.

There on the conquered desert sands
A brave young empire proudly stands!

We regret that our noble pioneer women could not live to see the full fruits of their self-sacrifice and toil. We of today bless their memory, and our children will render them gratitude. A hundred years hence, the people of Idaho will remember and reverence the heroism of this valiant band of women.

Many statues have been erected to commemorate the work of the pioneer men, who conquered the wilderness by the help of their women. But as yet no heroic figure, carved in stone, honors the West as it gives homage to the memory of the pioneer woman.

May such a statue rise some day under the blue Idaho skies!

This is the theme of the poem that closes my brief article.

A PIONEER WOMAN

A statue stands in a city block—
It is called, "The Pioneer"—
Of a rugged man, with an old flintlock,
And a cap from the skin of a deer.
His eyes look out to the mighty sweep
Of solitudes vast and grand,
He sees great plains and the forests deep,
A wide ocean's shifting sand.
His gaze is bold, and erect his form,
Plain moulded his features, and strong,
A man to breast the raging storm,
Well worthy of honor and song.
Then—musing long—I seem to see
The firm lips moving in speech,
And I hear these words come full and free:
"Go forth my message to teach!

"A statue should stand, here by my side,
That pioneer woman brave;
The wife who bore me children, and died,
And lies in an unmarked grave.

"She toiled with willing and faithful hands
In cabin, in forest, and field,
And helped to wrest, from the savage lands,
A home, to become our shield
From fierce things prowling when night shut down,
From storms that swept black and wild.
Her face was free from a sullen frown,
For she cherished each wee, new child,
As a soul from God, sent here on earth
To have a share in the toil
Of giving an empire an honored birth.
She dreamed that the fertile soil
Would teem with homes, and the millions dwell
Where only wild creatures ran.
The woman gives, as the ages tell,
In an equal share with man.

"Then place my mate close by my side,
That pioneer woman brave;
The wife who bore me children, and died,
And lies in an unmarked grave."

Women Educators of Idaho

By ALMA E. PLUMB
(Educator and writer)

The preponderance of women in the educational field is not confined to any one locality, but in no other state, perhaps, is the prominence of women educators so clearly defined as in the state of Idaho. Throughout the entire Western section of the Union there is a general recognition of the splendid abilities of women teachers and many high honors are accorded them; but in Idaho, even more than this is to be observed. From the interested mothers, eager to give their bits of service in their Parent-Teacher Association,—our lay teachers, as it were,—to the highest elective and appointive officers who carry on the work of organization and supervision, the woman worker is in the ascendant.

In pioneer days, when the one-teacher school was featured, its presiding genius was a "school ma'am" in nearly all instances, and a wonderful person she was. Now that our educational system has become so complex that there are an almost infinite number and variety of positions to be filled, it seems that there is also a wonderful woman ready and qualified to step into any one of these places. In Idaho she is given every opportunity to do so.

Women trustees elect women teachers in most of the rural districts, while brave and self sacrificing superintendents, also women, travel and toil to keep the torch of learning alight in the most isolated corners of the big and lonely counties they patrol. The task is arduous and the reward light from a financial viewpoint, and the great work is accomplished with so much efficiency and so little ostentation that the average citizen never realizes the bigness and power of these earnest emissaries of education.

In larger communities, women principals head faculties of women teachers. In all the elementary schools, men teachers are the exceptions to the rule, and in the higher schools, the women outnumber the men in astonishing proportion. Supervisors in the grade schools, specialists in art, music, physical education, home economics and, of course, all domestic science and sewing teachers, are women. Heads of departments are more often women than men, because the man teacher is very apt to leave the schools after a few years of service to prepare himself for a more lucrative profession, teaching to him being merely a means to an end.

Business colleges employ a large percentage of women, and public libraries, which are true centers of education, are almost entirely managed by women. Americanization schools for the foreign born are conducted by women, although the classes are largely made up of men. This work is one of the finest accomplishments of our women educators. Supervised playgrounds, those mighty allies of the schools, are also directed by women, and often they are created and sponsored by some organization of women.

In fact, we find the club women occupy a place very near the summit of our Parnassus. They raise funds especially for the purpose of putting needy girls through high school, or giving scholarships to the university, or making loans to struggling students at other institutions of learning, or helping to develop unusual talent that would otherwise never have a chance to expand. Rating high in intelligence and ideals themselves, these women never lose an opportunity to further the cause of higher education for the rising generation.

The highest elective school office in the state, that of State Superintendent, has been held for years by women of exceptional ability, and they have been such capable officers, combining the most practical methods with the most progressive ideas and the loftiest ideals, that the office seems now to be considered a feminine prerogative. One of these brilliant women, after a successful term of office, was appointed State Commissioner of Education, a position which demands both integrity and wisdom in the highest degree.

The University Extension also offers opportunity to women to carry inspiration and comfort to the busy people who are building the state, for Idaho, although it has a wealth of other resources, is preeminently an agricultural state. These teachers and demonstrators are the most modern instructors we can boast, and it is quite fitting that this little divertissement should end with a tribute to their skill and enthusiasm.

Idaho Is Interested in a Fort Hall Monument and the Oregon Trail

By DR. MINNIE F. HOWARD*

(Director for Idaho of Oregon Trail Memorial Ass'n)

In Idaho, the Daughters of the American Revolution, under the leadership of the writer, organized the "Fort Hall Monument Association," the object of which was to erect a monument on the site of the historic old 1834 Wyeth Fort Hall. This Idaho movement was developed by Ezra Meeker and others, into the Oregon Trail Memorial Association for which the Congress of the United States has authorized an issue of six million Memorial Coins. The plan asking Congress for this memorial coinage, originated with the Idaho Unit of this Association.

Proceeds from the sale of this Oregon Trail Memorial Coin will be used to erect monuments and memorials to the Oregon Trail. This coin is said by art critics, to be the most beautiful in United States coinage and a model for the future, being historic in design, instead of classic. It is the work of James Earl Fraser and his wife, Laura Gardin Fraser, being the first time in history that a man and his wife have jointly designed a government coin. It is interesting to note that both Fraser and Mrs. Fraser are western born.

*(Dr. Minnie Frances Howard, who is the Idaho director of the Oregon Trail Memorial Association, was complimented by the gift of the second Oregon Trail Memorial Coin to be sent out from the office of the Association, the first one having been presented to Ezra Meeker, the president. Mrs. Howard accepted the coin in behalf of her state and deposited it in the state museum at Boise.)

Also, this is the only time in history when a government has so complimented the objects of a Memorial Association, as to authorize so large a number as six million coins, to commemorate the heroism of the fathers and mothers who traversed the Oregon Trail to the Far West with great hardship, daring and loss of life, which not only resulted in adding new states to the Union but earned a well-deserved and imperishable fame for the pioneers; to honor the twenty thousand dead that lie buried in unknown graves along the two thousand miles of that great highway of history; to rescue the various important points along the trail from oblivion; and to commemorate by suitable monuments, memorial and otherwise, the tragic events associated with that emigration—erecting them along the trail or elsewhere, in localities appropriate for the purpose, including the city of Washington.

The bill authorizing the Oregon Trail Memorial Coin passed both House and Senate by unanimous vote, an incident also unique in our history. The places to be specially marked, in order of their importance, are Old Fort Hall, Whitman Mission, Fort Laramie and numerous other spots, with a monument to the Pioneers in the capital city of Washington.

Idaho's special interest is the erection of the Old Fort Hall Monument which the Idaho Unit of the Oregon Trail Memorial Association has unanimously voted should be upon the site of the historic old Fort which was a place of Destiny, instead of several miles from it, as advocated by some of the eastern members of the Association. The Idaho Unit of the Association feels that a monument a few miles from the spot, on the roadside with a "tablet pointing the way," would be really a monument to our present-day commercialism, instead of to "Fort Hall, the place where the Lord worked."

Founded by force of circumstance by the American, Nathaniel Wyeth, in 1834, Fort Hall was the means of bringing the Great American Migration to the Oregon Country and to California, it being a half-way place that Americans would reach and then go beyond. From it, trails radiated in five directions. Lost by Wyeth to the British interests in 1836, it was the site of clash of wits and wills between Hudson's Bay Company and Americans, to prevent American entrance into the Oregon Country by forcing abandonment of wagons at this point. When Whitman's "two hundred wagon train" succeeded in passing this place in 1843, thereby proving that Americans could reach the Columbia by wagon, it was the point where Hudson's Bay made every effort to divert Americans to California, then to Mexican territory, as depicted in Emerson Hough's "Covered Wagon." Here, at this spot, enough, just enough, Americans diverted to California eventually, to take it over to the American government without bloodshed; and enough, just enough, continued to the Oregon Country to also hold that great area for the American government without bloodshed, and all of this, also, without bloodshed at the site of Old Fort Hall.

A Higher Power seemed to be directing Destiny at the site of Old Fort Hall. By reason of the acquisition of California through the men who went to that land by influences operating at Old Fort Hall, it was California gold which helped save this nation. From the time of the founding of this country until then, only $70,000 in gold had been produced altogether. From 1848 to the beginning of the Civil War, $900,000,000 in gold was taken out of California, practically all of which went to enrich the North instead of the South. This was a determining factor in the holding of the Union together, because of which, we are a first class nation in the world today, with a leadership in the world that should count for righteousness of government under God's own plan and pattern.

Women of Montana

By SOPHIA HOLMES ADAMS
(Social Service Worker)

Montana is no longer "wild and woolly." In fact, she lays claim to educational and cultural advantages. Her vast plains, where a few decades ago, the Indian and buffalo roamed, now gleam golden under the great wheat harvest. More wheat is raised in Montana than in any other state in the Union. No longer is "Butte" the symbol of all the wild, reckless glitter of the "wide open" mining town with its saloons, dance halls and gambling dens that were open day and night. That day is gone forever. The greatest copper mining company in the world has its immense reduction works in Anaconda, twenty-eight miles from Butte. Montana proves her advancement best, perhaps, by the amused tolerance with which she meets the incredulous surprise of the eastern visitor. Six of the towns are "college towns" and many of the towns have a country club.

The technical education required of the men who are at the head of the various departments of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. and the men who are the professors and instructors at the university and colleges, is the greatest original cause for this change. These men naturally married women of congenial mental attainment. Then, as the towns grew, the need of men in all the other professions increased and these men brought their wives with them. Thus Montana is blessed with a rather large proportion of educated women scattered throughout her scanty population.

For the most part, these women did not let their brains atrophy, but while their husbands were making records in their lines, the women set to work to make records along other lines. The most influential women in Montana are not the "tea and bridge" crowd, but those who have done great work in the advancement of the finer things of life. As a result of their unselfish and unceasing labors, even the smallest communities have study clubs where the world's best in literature, art and music is brought to those so far away from the source of these things. The state has a population of very little over six hundred thousand and yet, there are six thousand members of the federated women's clubs. That means, if we figure four persons to a family, that one out of every twenty-five persons in the state gains advantages gleaned from the women's clubs. There are one hundred and thirty-five clubs in the federation.

To give a list of the fine women who have done all this, would take too much space. Of them, nothing finer can be said than that in almost no case has the dollar mark made any difference in social status or public leadership. Some of the highest honorary positions in the power of the women of the state to confer upon other women, are held by those whose family budget is comparatively small.

By MARY BRENNAN CLAPP

(Vice-Chairman, Extension Department, Montana Federation of Women's Clubs)

In a state measuring 146,977 square miles there is room for many women, and the total population of Montana being only 550,000, one might say there is room for many more women.

The distinction of Montana women is that in the mass they are cosmopolitan. Up and down and across the continent east of the divide, femininity has ventured or been invited into Montana. Women have come to teach and remained to keep house. Women have come to keep house and their daughters remain to practice law or medicine, to enter the Forest Service, or the State Legislature, to raise families, to write poetry, fiction, philosophy, to edit newspapers, to do all that femininity has ever tried, from driving aeroplanes to raising peonies on a dry-land farm. The first woman representative to the National Congress was a Montana woman.

Montana women are foundation builders. Their pioneer mothers blazed trails and made clearings, and their daughters are to carry on the construction of a culture worthy of a foundation built from stones of sincerity, self-knowledge, courage and love of humanity.

Montana is a land of promise. Montana women are working to make it a land of fulfillment. They are studying the problems of older, congested districts, determining to provide against undesirable experiences recorded there. They are going to be wise and capable to handle the larger issues upon which national welfare depends.

By MRS. A. J. BUCHEN

(Member of Library Board, Deer Lodge, Montana)

The women of Montana, today, are the splendid products of the more adventurous and the more courageous, who fought their way along the ever-extending frontier, building in so short a time, a people who enjoy the highest standard of living, the highest degree of education, who have gone out to meet the needs of the community in a spiritual and moral way.

The trials, disappointments and experiences of life have enriched and increased their capacity for a tolerant understanding of the problems which confront them. They are unprejudiced in politics, working wholeheartedly, with a clear vision for the needs and good of all humanity, basing their beliefs upon facts substantiated by definite proofs.

They have a rare realization of the needs of women in all places, and a thorough, working knowledge of all they undertake to do. They have high and definitely-defined ideals for their families, home life, communities and all interests which they serve. They believe uncompromisingly that "No woman has a right to undertake any work outside of her home, that does not emanate from the home and, in its finest results, return to the home."

Women of Montana are independent, do their own thinking, exercise and hold efficient places in the business world as well as in the home, which, after all, is the largest and most important business outlined for womankind.

Women of Nevada Interested In Politics

By Felice Cohn
(Attorney-at-Law, Reno)

What are all of Nevada women interested in? Well, primarily, as we are normal women we are interested in all the things that appeal to women the length and breadth of our country. In varying degrees, of course, according to our individual tastes, education and position—likewise, pocketbooks. Some of us married ones are devoted to our husbands, our families, our homes—a domestic life is the life for us. Some of us, married or unmarried, as the case may be, prefer less domesticity and have gone into the business world with marked success. A few outstanding ones have chosen professional careers and are gallantly fighting our way thru life. All this is interwoven with the usual social interests that include bridge, dancing, golf, organizations of all kinds from the frankly frivolous ones to the splendid study or welfare clubs that demand (and receive) much unselfish devotion on the part of the members.

Nothing unusual in all this. On the surface of things, at least the lives of us Nevada women appear much like the lives of our sisters in other states—broadened and sweetened, mayhap, by the splendid liberty that is ours.

But, no matter how varied our tastes may be; no matter whether we be homemakers or business women, or perhaps both (for we frequently combine these talents); no matter whether we be young or old, rich or poor, active or ailing, we have one great interest that appeals to us all. We are all sisters under the skin. There is one clarion call that we all respond to and one topic of conversation that never grows old or stale or loses interest, and that is Politics! Yes, Politics—capital "P" at that!

Not that we are all politicians or running for office or anything like that! Far from it, tho we have our quota of women politicians who perform their duties as well as any men could. But we are all just naturally interested in the subject of politics for the very simple and understandable reason that we know all, or nearly all, of our politicians personally. If we don't know them, we do know their families, or their in-laws! We have seen them; we have met them; we have talked to them and, like as not, we have entertained them in our homes. Often we have grown up with them and frequently, they are members of our own family. At all events, they are not abstract personalities, these politicians of ours. We don't have to take their measure through the newspapers. Whether they be senators, or congressmen, or governors or other state officials or merely petty county officers, we are well acquainted with them or somebody belonging to them, and we are not afraid to speak our minds about them, either.

The cause of all this lies in the fact that, although Nevada with her some 110,000 square miles is the third state in point of size, her population is below 100,000, thus giving, as one witty woman said, "A square mile for every square man (or woman)." So our women, as well as our men, take a decidedly keen interest in knowing that the friend or neighbor is running for office. It follows that, what in other states might be a more or less perfunctory duty, in this state of ours, it is a personal pleasure to vote for, or against, our politicians. With the strong Kleig light of private opinion (much more pitiless than public opinion) turned on them, it is no wonder that the old battle-cry, "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party" is heard in the land. But then, politicians are politicians the world over, and we are all beguiled by their smiling faces and fair promises and we are vitally concerned over the fate of the least of these. We are not unmindful of the political doings of our neighboring states but, of course, they lack the personal element that gives such a tang to our conversations at home, at clubs, over the tea-table or at bridge, for we certainly mingle our politics with all our activities and who shall say us nay?

Western Women In Government

By REAH WHITEHEAD
(Justice of the Peace, Seattle, Washington)

Women are in Government objectively and subjectively; objectively in the sense of holding public positions, subjectively in their influence upon Government through clubs, civic organizations and other groups.

Referring first to "Women in Government" objectively, available sources reveal the following in my own State of Washington.

There are 39 counties in the State. The following county offices are now held by women.

ELECTIVE

Supt. of Schools	20
Auditor	6
Clerk	8
Treasurer	8
Assessor	1
Justice of the Peace	2

APPOINTIVE

Deputy Prosecuting Attorney—(1 designated as "Divorce Proctor")	2

The following state positions are held by women:

Supt. of Schools (elective)
Supervisor of Women in Industry (appointive)
Senator	1
Representative	1

A woman, Mrs. Bertha K. Landes, has just completed a two-year term (elective) as Mayor of Seattle, a city of nearly 500,000.

The following appointive positions in Seattle are also filled by women:

Member Public Library Board	1
Member Park Board	2
Member Civil Service Commission	1
Supt. of City Schools	1

In at least one city in the State, a woman holds the elective position of city attorney.

There are approximately seventeen police women in the State—eight in Seattle. The movement for police women generally is growing rapidly throughout the United States. Prevention and protection are their chief objectives.

Women of Washington are qualified jurors. In actual practice, about an equal number of men and women participate in this important governmental service.

By a recent act of the State Legislature, the State Committee of any political party must consist of one committee woman and one committee man from each county.

There are doubtless other positions elective and appointive, held by women in Washington, but the above includes most of those of which records are available at this time.

In the three other states of the Northwest—Idaho, Montana and Oregon, many interesting and important positions have been held by women in the past few years. Here are a few selected at random:

MONTANA:

State Supt. of Public Instruction and others in educational positions.
Director of Child Welfare, State Board of Health.
Member State Board of Charities and Reforms.
Deputy Registrar State Lands.

OREGON:

State Senator.
State Librarian.
Assistant to State Attorney General.
Judge of District Court.
Member of the following State Boards:
Board of Regents, State Agricultural College, University of Oregon.
Board of Examination of Graduate Nurses.
Board of Text Book Commissioners.
Board of Inspection of Child Labor.
Child Welfare Commission.
Vocational Education.
Parole Board.

As to "Women in Government" subjectively, their numbers are legion. Ever since acquiring the right to vote, they have been seriously and intensively studying civics, science of government and practical politics, through their clubs, civic organizations and extension courses. The effectiveness of women in organized groups is evidenced by two national amendments adopted by the United States within the past nine years,—the 18th or Prohibition Amendment, and the 19th or Suffrage Amendment. The first was largely due to the ceaseless efforts of the W.C.T.U., and the second to the various woman suffrage organizations. These two amendments have, in many respects, revolutionized the course of our Government.

Upon the acquisition of suffrage their political garments were handed to women ready-made. These did not always fit, nor were they always comfortable. Women set about learning to make their own, through clubs and other groups. While they have been doing intensive work in their dress-making courses, they have not been unduly rushing. When they do step out and put to practical use the training they have acquired, they want to know how to make good garments,—garments made for and by themselves, and garments that will fit!

Citizenship has brought to women responsibilities as well as privileges. Men, during their centuries of citizenship, have fought and bled and died for their country, and the ideals it represented to them. Women will never fight on the field of battle. They, like most men, do not believe in war and, unlike men, are able to resist its urge because they have not the fear of the challenge of cowardice being hurled at them. Their battles will be fought on the field of human ideas, opinions and judgments, and there they will contend, struggle and suffer, if need be, for their country and the ideals it represents to them.

Women of the United States gained national suffrage only eight years ago. Adult women had grown up without full-citizenship consciousness; girl children who were then ten or twelve years old, have just now reached voting age with half-citizenship consciousness; those born at or since the granting of suffrage have not yet acquired their majority. What will be the result of "Women in Government" in the next decade or two, when a whole generation of young women will have been born and reared with full-citizenship consciousness?

A Few of the Eminent WOMEN of NEW MEXICO

Women of New Mexico

By MAUD HANCOCK PRICHARD
(Educator. For three years member of New Mexico Normal University Faculty)

New Mexico—the land of "sunshine, silence, and adobe," the land of poco tiempo—is also a land of contrasts, of a happy intermingling of the old and the new. Youngest of the States of the Union—except one—yet within its bounds is found the oldest civilization on the continent, just as it was found when the first white man ventured into the vast unknown regions of New Spain in quest of riches for his Church and his King, and it is the only section of our great country where the Red Man has been left in possession of his lands and homes, and where he worships the gods of his fathers in the same way as for centuries past.

The history of New Mexico is replete with the achievements of this great Territory in the various wars of our Nation—sending more men (many of whom were Red Men) in proportion to its population than any other state or territory, but little or nothing is said of what the women did during those troublous times. No doubt the pioneer woman stood shoulder to shoulder in those times as did the Women's Council of Defense with the Men's Council during the World War.

However, in peace times, and after statehood was attained, is when accomplishments of the women of New Mexico have been outstanding. Almost coincident with the organization of the new State was the organization of the Federation of Women's Clubs by a group of women representing all parts of the State, which soon became a part of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Since then other groups have founded other clubs, lodges, sororities, the League of Women Voters and Business and Professional Women's Federation.

New Mexico is exceptionally fortunate in the large number of women within its borders—found not only in cities but also in small towns, on ranches and in isolated places—who have brought to this western environment the training and culture acquired in the older states. With this background, there has developed a group of women of wonderful executive ability, with the foresight to plan and carry out constructive projects that have had much to do with the progress of the new State along lines that mean much for the social welfare of its citizens.

No doubt the pioneer woman stood shoulder to shoulder in those times as did the Women's Council of Defense with the Men's Council during the World War.

New Mexico is exceptionally fortunate in the large number of women within its borders—found not only in cities but also in small towns, on ranches and in isolated places—who have brought to this western environment the training and culture acquired in the older states. With this background, there has developed a group of women of wonderful executive ability, with the foresight to plan and carry out constructive projects that have had much to do with the progress of the new State along lines that mean much for the social welfare of its citizens.

Logically, the Federation of Women's Clubs has taken the lead in these plans, but since the organization of the other groups, they have all worked as one body for the completion of the projects. While the clubwomen were awake to the needed activities, they realized that such matters must be carried on as State work, so the legislative committee of the Federation became an important factor of their plans, to present the various needs for approval by the Legislature. At first the committee was received somewhat dubiously, members of the Legislature seeming to feel that it was more or less of a fad and rather doubting that women thought and planned seriously on State affairs, but as a committee from the Federation appeared at each successive session of the Legislature, and seemed to know what they wanted and how to present the matter in an intelligent manner, the attitude on the part of the law makers has become one of respect and interested attention, and the requests of the women's organizations have been granted and appropriations made, even at times when it seemed impossible to do so.

As a result of the constructive plans of the Federation, the State has the following departments and institutions (which probably would have been created eventually, but there is no doubt they were provided much sooner than they would have been otherwise) named in the order of their establishment: (a) State Child Welfare Bureau, with corresponding Board, which has since been placed coordinate with the State Bureau of Health—each with its separate director—under the State Public Welfare Board; (b) Girls' Welfare Home (reform school), with a board composed entirely of women; (c) Home and School for Mental Defectives, for which plans are now complete for construction of the first building unit, and which also has a board of women.

Also, plans were made in time so that New Mexico was among the six states that were ready to accept and make use of funds for maternity and infancy work as provided by Federal aid, which has meant much for welfare work in rural communities.

The Board of Regents of each of the State educational institutions has at least one woman as a member. We have had a woman as Secretary of State for the last three terms, each of whom has served for a short time as Acting-Governor in the absence of the Governor from the State. State Superintendent of Public Instruction is also a position occupied by a woman for the last three terms. Several women have served as members of the Legislature. A majority of the County Superintendents are women, as well as a number of other county officers, especially the clerks. Many of the county Boards of Education have women as members.

Most of the interest taken by women in the affairs of State is from the standpoint of economy and efficiency. One matter of congratulation is that in none of the above departments or institutions which the women have had a special part in creating, has partisan politics had any share or influence at any time.

Every town of any size has managed to secure a library—usually through the efforts of a group of women in the beginning—and even some places that are scarcely a dot on the map have a fair library started, in connection with which many a story of human interest might be told. Hand in hand with the other lines of work are the Scholarship Loan Funds which practically every club of every organization maintains, by which many girls have been enabled to continue their education.

Woman Suffrage and Jury Service in New Mexico

By JENNIE FORTUNE
(Secretary of State)

The passage of the Nineteenth Amendment formally crystallized the high hopes of the nation's womanhood in their fight for the right to hold political office. Incidentally, the extension of the vote to women wrought a most marvelous and revolutionary change in the politics of New Mexico. In this State where the general tendency is to accept any modern change with caution, women are now appointed and elected to office in a manner hardly dreamed of a few years ago. That these women have made good, is neither unusual nor remarkably surprising. That some have made mistakes or are not especially qualified is also neither unusual nor need it be surprising. Especially since rarely, if ever, does merit enter as a prime prerequsite of a political aspirant, be that man or woman. The only astonishing thing is that woman should be expected to act any different from her male contemporary.

New Mexico has not yet recognized the right of women to sit on juries. It is a duty that undeniably should go with citizenship. Like men, however, she should have accorded to her the right of jury exemption, in the event that release from such service fills a more important or greater need.

Though New Mexico has no constitutional bar to women sitting on juries, any attempt to institute a legislative act to qualify women for jury service is sure to meet with opposition from the women themselves, who primarily fear the enforced absence from home that such duty would entail. Nevertheless, in all probability, the privilege and duty of jury service will gradually be extended to the womanhood of this State. Such a change, to be sure, will be quite as revolutionary in the experience of the womanhood of New Mexico as was the newly acquired right of the exercise of the franchise.

And for the women of New Mexico it will be a most salutary experience. It will widen their scope of reasoning; it will give them a deeper insight into human emotions, human frailties and human motives; it will make real the law as daily applied, and above all, it will widen their vison and extend their sympathy and understanding in human affairs. And for all this, it will make them wiser citizens and better mothers.

Nor is the day long in coming, when, in the course of everyday affairs, men and women will meet as equals, each in sympathy with the other's qualities, not necessarily alike in each other, but just as the Lord intended, "eternally different"; but each seeking for the mutual advancement, achievement and betterment of that country under whose flag they choose to live.

A Few of the Eminent WOMEN OF OREGON

Pioneer Women of Oregon

By ANNE SHANNON MONROE
(Author of "Singing in the Rain")

The development of no state in the West has a finer base in its pioneer women than has Oregon. . . . As are the roots, so will be the blossoms,—and Oregon's roots are of sturdy fibre and go deep in the virgin soil. . . . In the beginning, there was Sacajawea, the Indian woman who as guide, made the way to the coast through warring tribes possible for Lewis and Clark. . . . Later, there was Narcissa Whitman, the young bride of Marcus Whitman, the Presbyterian missionary about whose name war is still waged as to whether he did or did not save Oregon to the Union; but the heroism of whose wife, giving her life for the planting of Gospel teaching in the raw new West, is not disputed. . . . Later still there were the mothers of two of America's most renowned poets, Edwin Markham and Joaquin Miller; the former a poet herself with many excellent contributions to her credit to be found in the old files of one of Oregon's earliest prints, the Spectator, published at Oregon City; the latter a sturdy pioneer mother, carrying on the business of education and character building among her children in a log cabin hewed out of the primitive Oregon forest. . . . And still later, when the suffrage movement began to stir the world, there were Abigail Scott Duniway, Dr. Mary Thompson and Dr. Owens-Adair, women who gave their years and energies to the long fight for votes; the two physicians being among the first women ever admitted to medical colleges anywhere in the world, and Dr. Owens-Adair being a pioneer in the movement for surgical treatment for all criminals and insane, and the mother of the first bill authorizing this treatment ever passed by any legislature. . . . Practical ends were not overlooked. Mrs. Lord, widow of an early Oregon governor, devoted years of study to flax, and the demonstration that the highest quality for linen-weaving could be grown, commercially, in Oregon—thus connecting her name forever with this industry in its infancy. . . . Other names stand equally high in Oregon's history; these only suggest the various avenues of progress in which her women have gone ahead, carrying banners.

Women of Oregon

By MARIAN MILLER (EDITH KNIGHT HILL)
(Editorial and Feature Writer, "The Oregonian")

Dauntless as the courage of their mothers and grandmothers who crossed the plains in covered wagons, is the courage and faith of the present day women of Oregon, the women who are doing things, whether it be homemaking, office managing, law enforcing or achieving success in the arts, sciences, or in literature. In each center of population in every district of the great state, culture is a keynote. The women of Oregon have done much to establish this fact. Women's clubs, organized in small towns and villages, in logging camps and mountain and seashore communities, have been the means of starting libraries, social and recreational advantages which are of inspiring influence in the state.

Not many of the women of Oregon have struck out for individual honors, but thousands of them have stood firm for political and civic righteousness. Long years ago, Abigail Scott Duniway was known as a pioneer striving for the ballot for womankind. The service she rendered, with the help of those who worked with her in the cause, can not be overestimated. She was the type of pioneer Oregon woman, determined, intelligent, capable, untiring in her efforts. Certain similar traits are to be found in many of the women living now who have contributed to woman's work in Oregon.

Sarah A. Evans, past president of the Oregon Federation of Women's Clubs, a market inspector of Portland for many years, is another great character. Mrs. Frederick Eggert, who so ably piloted the destinies of the scholarship loan fund, is another.

The City Federation of Women's Clubs of Portland, recently had as its president, a young woman who is known as a "judge," an attorney of rare ability.

The landscape architectural work of Portland, the international rose test garden and many of the loveliest gardens of lovely Portland, are the work of a young professional woman, Florence Holmes Gerke.

The Good Samaritan Hospital, Portland, is a large and prosperous institution, managed by Emily Loveridge, capable, clever and good, an executive with a heart, as well as a wealth of professional ability.

In Eastern Oregon, there are bright women managing large wheat ranches and business concerns. In Southern Oregon, women head many of the largest enterprises. In legislative bodies, they have won renown. As heads of large schools, they have shown splendid leadership. In business, as realtors, office managers, and as heads of large stores, women are winning recognition.

The Oregon women have a way of doing things that bespeaks determination, courage, ability and love for their work. Above all, the women of Oregon are makers of homes. Early in the history of the Oregon country, schools and colleges were established and women were active in every enterprise of a cultural nature.

Pioneer Women of the West

By SHEBA HARGREAVES
(Author: "The Cabin at the Trail's End")

Breaking the westward trail for the covered wagon, strong-hearted women fared forth "across the plains" with their husbands in quest of homes on the Pacific Coast. The women who established these first homes were a self-effacing type, busy with household cares and the training of large families, but they carried "the torch of civilization" with them. They were women who must have a curtain at the cabin window, a puncheon floor scoured as clean as home-made soft soap and water could make it, and a low rocking chair by the evening fireside where little children gathered at their knees to lisp their bedtime prayers. Where they lived there must be a puncheon shelf for the Bible, Webster's Blue-backed Spelling Book and McGuffy's Reader. They seldom voiced their sufferings. They asked but little; if their children could have religious and educational advantages they followed their husbands meekly enough.

The crossing was hazardous. Two thousand miles in a summer with an ox team hitched to a springless wagon! This was the prospect ahead of a wife whose husband decided to "go west" in the 1840's. Oregon then was that vast stretch of country west of the Rocky Mountains, north to the Canadian border and south to the forty-second parallel. The country was unsettled except for the Hudson Bay Company's post at Vancouver and a few French-Canadian farmers on French Prairie who had settled down with their Indian wives when their term of service with the company was over.

The suffering of the crossing has been recounted over and over. The work of building homes in a wild new country where the family must depend almost entirely upon its own resources for the first hard years was bravely undergone. The woman's side of the great colonizing movement has never been greatly stressed, but in reality, at least an equal share of the subduing of the wilderness fell upon their capable shoulders. The law and order from which civilization springs on a frontier came with the silent, unassuming women with babies in their arms and little children clinging to their skirts.

Government must be firmly established if women and children were to live in safety. School and churches must be maintained. The mental and moral welfare of the settlement must be attended to for the sake of the children. Women insisted on this. Women have ever been the civilizing influence.

At first there was a grim hand-to-hand struggle for food, clothing, and shelter, so the women could not give attention to the broadening of their mental horizons, but always the deep-seated ambition in the hearts of the mothers was to smooth the path of their daughters, to provide for them more advantages than they had enjoyed.

The dawn of the age of machinery in the next generation brought about the gradual emancipation from the abject drudgery of the household. Spinning, weaving and soap-making were taken out of the home. The invention of the typewriter opened up undreamed-of avenues for the daughters of the family to earn a living. The seeds of ambition planted in the hearts of the daughters of sacrificing pioneer mothers bore fruit in the lives of the next two generations. They began blazing mental and spiritual frontiers.

With the entering of broader fields of labor, changes in the attitude of women toward their work took place. Agitation for equal suffrage was begun and carried on to victory in the West by a daughter of one of Oregon's earliest pioneers; Abigail Scott Duniway was a trail-blazer just as her mother had been before her. Volumes might be written about these heroic women who opened the professions, the arts and the sciences to their sisters. Dr. Owens-Adair and Dr. Mary Thompson took up the study of medicine and practiced in spite of almost unsurmountable obstacles. Mary A. Leonard demanded to be admitted to practice law at the Oregon bar and special legislation was enacted so that she might be admitted. The old idea that woman's only place was in the home, even after the occupations of the home had been lightened by machinery, still prevailed. The spirit that subdued the frontier must break down the opposition to women in the larger housekeeping which has to do with the affairs of the country.

It is fifty years or so too soon to tell the story of that pivotal generation of women who, while rearing their families, set their faces steadily to affairs outside the home. These, too, are the pioneer women to whom we must pay homage along with the subduers of the western frontier who were their mothers and grandmothers. They deserve veneration for their bravery. For so long as civilization shall carry on we will have these unassuming pioneers who will break down barriers and subdue other than actual frontiers, and women will do their part shoulder to shoulder with men just as they did in the 1840's when the West was transformed in less than seventy years into a great commonwealth.

The Last Frontier

By LOIS RANDOLPH
(Superintendent of New Mexico State Department of Education)

There is something romantic and appealing about frontier or pioneer life. The thrill of living next to nature and battling with her forces, and the wholesomeness of life in the wide spaces all have their appeal to the average man or woman. This frontier life develops a hardiness of character and staunchness of soul that has had much to do with America's miraculous and speedy ascent to her place among nations of the world.

The "49" gold rush caused the westward march of progress to leap almost from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast overnight, and in this leap the territory now included in our mountain states was almost overlooked. Hence, we find that America's last frontier, instead of being the Pacific seaboard, is rather on the high plateaus leading down from the Rockies toward our neighboring republic on the south.

This last frontier is slowly but steadily giving way before modern conditions, and we, who are a part of this colorful life, view this breaking up and crumbling of the old with mixed feelings. We rather regret that the picturesque Indian life is gradually disappearing, and we can not but sigh for the downfall of romantic and colorful Spanish life. We cling stubbornly to the sleepy little Spanish villages along the Rio Grande, and we hold the old Missions as beautiful proofs of man's ability and courage to dare the desert and savage foe in order to carry the Cross into all the dark corners of the world. All of this has its appeal to us, even tho we be prosaic Anglo and Protestant. On the other hand, we have seen through the past quarter of a century the inevitable injustice that follows when a simple, primitive and trusting people are subject to the exploitation of a political regime so corrupt that it almost whitewashes the Carpet-bag Government in the South that followed fast on the heels of the Civil War.

These mountain states have wonderful natural resources, and these will be developed in the near future. The United States can look to this area to provide a large amount of our fuel, lumber and agricultural products. Big business interests will bring new blood into these states, is now bringing it in, and our cowboy with his ten-gallon hat, our Indian in moccasin and robe, our Spanish Don with his old world courtesy are all being gradually fused into that product of the Melting Pot called the American.

To one who has known the Southwest intimately, the outlook is, after all, encouraging. The qualities that enabled these frontier people to "carry on" in face of most unfavorable conditions are the very qualities that our national life must have if America is to endure.

The Pioneer Women of Utah

By Mrs. Amy Brown Lyman
(General Secretary, National Woman's Relief Society)

Utah's Seagull Monument was erected in memory of the gulls, which in early days saved the first crops from destruction by omnivorous western crickets. It portrays in a group of pioneer figures at its base, the pioneer woman. This woman, the inspiration of the group in which she is placed, stands erect beside the man, who, with drooping head and relaxed muscles, is plainly disheartened. The children are listless and weary; but the woman, with head up and muscles tense, is plainly dominated by mother-love and by the basic instincts of life and race preservation. She alone shows indomitable courage and determination. This woman is typical of those Western pioneer women, who arm in arm with the men, helped to blaze the trails across the great American Desert and to found an empire in the West.

In the founding and development of Utah, women bore a prominent part in welfare work and in every endeavor. In the poverty of early days, when isolated people were threatened with famine, the women endured privations with fortitude and with every ounce of their strength worked and fought for the fundamentals—shelter, food and clothing. When necessary, they aided in the construction of their homes and the raising of crops. They spun, wove, produced their clothing and reared large families.

The State was founded by "Mormon" pioneers. Later other groups of women were similarly active in all phases of educational and welfare work. The pioneer women of Utah had a close-knit and effective organization, the Relief Society. Founded in 1842, five years before the trek across the plains, it is still a vigorous and active society, with a present membership of 61,820. Organized primarily for philanthropic and charitable purposes, this society has been a private outdoor relief agency from the beginning, functioning in every town and hamlet in Utah; it has also been a prime factor in every movement for the benefit of humanity.

The pioneers of Utah had to establish their own schools, create their own amusements and inaugurate their own health programs. Under the leadership of Brigham Young, they lost no time in providing the elements which make for normal living. In educational and recreational fields, and in health and charity work, Utah women have been active. Some of the most able teachers and writers in the State have been women, and some of the most famous actresses in the country began their careers in the famed Salt Lake Theatre.

Among this people the men and women of attainment always stood out as leaders. In early days an English nurse and her husband, a physician, gave lectures to the women on health and home nursing. Several Utah women, graduates from Eastern medical schools, were practicing medicine in the second generation of pioneers. In 1882, an institution known as the Desert Hospital was established by the women and was the forerunner of the Utah hospitals of today. This early insight created interest in public health and sanitation, in pure water supply and in other preventive health measures.

A unique movement of pioneer days was a seri-culture project established by the women of the Relief Society. It included the planting of mulberry trees, the growing of cocoons and the manufacture of raw silk into cloth. For many years the industry was successful, the raw material winning prizes at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. Susan B. Anthony wore, with much pride, a dress made of Utah silk, presented by the women of the Relief Society. There were three silk factories in the State, and hundreds of yards of silk cloth and ribbon were manufactured.

To facilitate the exchange of domestic commodities in the primitive, isolated Western life, where money and manufactured merchandise were scarce, women throughout the State conducted cooperative stores. At these they exchanged the products of their labors, their handiwork and also household articles, with a view of mutual helpfulness in meeting the pioneer problems.

To promote and develop their work more effectively these women raised funds and erected halls where their weekly meetings and socials were held. Here they would gather to sew, knit, remodel clothing, prepare burial clothing and make quilts and carpets. These articles were either sold for the benefit of the treasury, or were given to those in need. Unique Relief Society halls, several costing as much as $5,000, were to be found in many of the communities—monuments to the industry and enterprise of pioneer women.

In 1875, President Brigham Young, realizing the importance of an adequate food supply for his isolated people in far-away Utah, instituted a grain-saving movement. Entire crops had several times been destroyed by the elements or by grasshoppers and other insects. Cut off from the rest of the country, the people must prepare for emergencies. As the early settlers were in constant fear of famine, the mission of saving and storing grain was given to the women of the Relief Society. From the time the movement was inaugurated, in 1875, until the World War, nearly fifty years later, the organization had constantly on hand a large supply of wheat and a substantial wheat fund.

On various occasions when great disasters have occurred, the Relief Society has contributed wheat and flour. A notable example was the contribution of several carloads of flour sent to San Francisco at the time of the earthquake and fire. At the time of the World War, the Relief Society had on hand 100,000 bushels of wheat, which was turned over to the Food Administration.

In addition to L. D. S. Relief Society women who have functioned throughout the State, there have been other able groups of church and club women who have carried on activities in the larger centers. As a result of their vision and labor, some forward-looking welfare institutions have been established in the State, such as the Orphan's Home and Day Nursery, the Neighborhood House, a home for the aged, and the Children's Aid Society.

The women of Utah were early interested in suffrage and intermittently had the franchise, even in territorial days. When Utah received statehood in 1896, the Constitution permanently bestowed upon them the power to vote. Because of their political privileges, Utah women became active participators and conspicuous figures in the National Woman Suffrage Movement. To support this great cause they sent delegates regularly to the National Suffrage Conventions. The first woman State Senator in the United States was a Utah woman, who served in 1897. At the same session of the legislature another Utah woman sat in the House. Since this time women have regularly been elected to the legislature.

The spirit of the Utah pioneer woman is the heritage and inspiration of the Utah woman of today, who, sheltered, protected and free from actual hardships, is yet imbued with the same spirit of progress and development. She is still pioneering, but in newer and different fields, in modern education and in humanitarian movements.

Art in Utah in Pioneer Days

By ALICE LOUISE REYNOLDS
(Professor of English Literature, Brigham Young University)

Art culture in Utah had its foundation in early days. In the heart of a desert one does not expect to find interest in drama; yet five years after the pioneers entered Utah in 1847, they were building a "little theatre," thereafter to be known as the Social Hall. At the front entrance of the building was a bust of Shakespeare. Dedicated January 1, 1853, for nearly ten years, high class drama was presented in this building. Later it was supplanted by the Salt Lake Theatre, which was first opened to the public on March 6, 1862. In the early years of the Salt Lake Theatre, Thomas A. Lyne, George Pauncefort and Julia Dean Hayne appeared in leading roles, often of Shakespeare. They were assisted by local talent formed into stock companies. It was during this early period that Maude Adams was taken from her cradle and carried on to the stage.

The great organ built by Mr. Joseph H. Ridges in the early sixties made possible a culture in music that could not have existed without it. The auditorium of the Salt Lake Tabernacle, with its wonderful acoustic properties, magnifying, as it does, the tones of the organ, has much to do with the effectiveness of the instrument. Adelina Patti is quoted as saying: "Never have I encountered such perfect resonance as here in the Tabernacle. Why, my voice is twice as large here. It carried further and with ever so much more tone than any other hall I have ever sung in."

One of the leaders of the Tabernacle choir of the sixties, was Professor George Careless, a man who had played first violin in Sir Michael Costa's orchestra in London. He was himself a composer and knew good music. It was while Professor Careless was in charge of the Tabernacle choir, in the late sixties and seventies, that the Deseret News noted the following compositions sung at a church conference, "Sanctus," "The Earth is the Lord's," "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains," "Jerusalem, My Glorious Home." Professor Careless was leader of the theatre orchestra for twelve years at two periods of six years each. He produced the first oratorio in 1875 and for fourteen years, was leader of the Tabernacle choir.

In the late seventies Professor A. C. Smyth, teacher of music in the Salt Lake City schools, produced several of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. Perhaps the most famous quartet that was ever assembled in the state, was the Boshard and Pyne Brothers quartet, of Provo. It brought together four voices that blended and made an unusually well-balanced quartet that remained together for forty years.

The state has produced a commendable number of painters, many of whom were compelled, in pioneer days, to combine with their art the practical affairs of life. Notable among them was the pioneer painter, George M. Ottinger, who was at one time chief of the fire department of Salt Lake City. He painted, in addition to home paintings, scenery and a curtain for the Salt Lake Theatre. W. C. Morris, who did much of the decorating and scene painting for the Salt Lake Theatre, was a practical decorator; while among the first of our pioneer landscape painters were J. B. Fairbanks and John Hafen, who represent a class who were compelled to farm and who could paint only at odd moments.

The outstanding sculptor of the state, Cyrus E. Dallin of Springville, had his career shaped largely by his pioneer environment. He is noted for his Indian pieces, such as "The Medicine Man," "The Appeal to the Great Spirit," "Massasoit," and "The Scout." We have his own word for it that he became interested in the Indians through seeing them in his native town. He says he saw them in their colorful blankets and knew they possessed an art that the white man in his impoverished pioneer surroundings, did not possess. Mr. Dallin says that as he studied the red man in his councils with the whites, making treaties of peace, he beheld in him a majesty of soul that he has devoted his life to portraying and perpetuating through the sculptor's art.

Ruth Karr McKee, for several years a member of the Board of Regents, University of Washington.

Women of Washington

By MARY J. ELMENDORF
(Writer and Poet)

This subject is too big to be treated adequately in a brief article; but, perhaps, a bird's-eye view may educe some salient features. The State is young, but it has progressed creditably in various directions and is still vigorously upon the upward road. Several more than locally prominent figures in the feminine world have brought home trophies won in commercial, club, sport and artistic fields. As in most pioneering affairs, women have shared with men the hazards and awards of adventurings, and to them much of the praise is due for the attainments of the commonwealth. I regret, therefore, that space forbids the mention of many names worthy of being annaled.

Easily the most widely known woman in Washington is Mrs. Henry M. Landes, the present Mayor of Seattle. Not content to rest upon the honor of being the wife of an eminent professor in the University of Washington and the sister of Dr. David Starr Jordan, former President of Stanford University, Mrs. Landes, by her own ability, courage and integrity, has carved for herself a unique and enviable position in the community. So ably has she fulfilled the duties of her civic office that she has won the admiration of even her sturdiest opponents. High national honors are predicted by many for this clever woman, should she choose to continue in the political arena.

In educational circles, Josephine Corliss Preston has long and meritoriously occupied important posts. She is our present State Superintendent of Education. Her excellent assistant, Elizabeth Russum, is in charge of our rural schools.

An outstanding monument to a woman's accomplishment is the Cornish School in Seattle. Nellie Cornish is the founder and its present head. Music in all its branches, dancing and dramatic art are taught here by competent teachers, many of whom have a wide reputation in their respective arts, and by distinguished guest-artists. Many Ann Wells, a dancer of more than local fame, is a graduate of this school and now the director of her own institution.

The Daughters of the American Revolution are proud of Mrs. William Sherman Walker, who has gained national recognition by her faithful services in a high capacity in the organization.

Musicians and composers thrive in this salubrious environment. Daisy Wood Hildreth and Katherine Glen Kerry are, I believe, among the best known. Each has successful songs to her credit. Mrs. Frederick Bentley, a clever musician and critic, has helped her state culturally and has financially fostered impecunious talent into national floresence.

The State has several women editors who are known beyond its borders. Helen Maring Samsel, herself a poet of promise and distinction, conducts the commendable verse magazine, "Muse and Mirror." Idella Purnell, also a distinguished poet, is editor of "Palms." Mable Clelland, a contributor to many magazines, is now in charge of "The Western Woman," a monthly periodical devoted to women's interests.

In a country of great natural beauty and resources, it is inevitable that the romantic and poetic impulse should prosper. Cordons of perennially white peaks, evergreen forests and wide ocean-moors, favored by quickening rains and blessed with brilliant sunlight, reflect their strength and loveliness in the aspirations of their human neighbors. Poets a-plenty are here. Some of them have found a welcome in leading editorial sanctums, and a few have published books of poems.

Fiction writers, too, feel the spur of this northland toward imaginative endeavors; and non-fiction writers have some notable names in their ranks. Mrs. Otis Floyd Lamson and Audrey Wurdemann are scintillant members of the local branch of the League of American Pen-Women. Esther Shepherd has compiled a collection of Paul Bunyan tales which has been most favorably received. Washington claims Belle Burns Gromer, a brilliant short-story writer and Emma-Lindsay Squier, the well-known author and naturalist. Ella Higginson, a celebrated writer, now lives near Bellingham.

With this worthy record gracing its adolescence, is it too optimistic, think you, to prophesy for our young State a maturity of brilliant feminine achievement?

Activities of Washington Women

By HELEN NORTON STEVENS
(Editor of "The Bulletin")

About thirty-two years ago, the Washington State Federation of Women's Clubs was organized in the city of Tacoma. The nucleus was several women's clubs scattered over a new state, with a few earnest-minded women agreeing to bring them together for mutual benefit and the public good. Like all other organizations of that time, a motto was adopted which was "to increase light" and that has been the aim in all succeeding years. Believing in cooperation, the Federation very early affiliated with the General Federation of Women's Clubs. From its pioneer days, the Federation has progressed until it now numbers 20,000 members, and functions through eight departments of work. One especially noteworthy committee assists young women to complete university training by lending money in the later years of their college course.

A recent accomplishment has been the purchasing of a 60-acre tract of virgin timber, in the western part of Washington, which has been deeded to the state for the benefit of the present and future generations. This beautiful park of trees will become the recreation, as well as a historic spot, when Washington's magnificent forests are a thing of the past.

The seventeenth president of the Federation, Mrs. Serena F. Mathews, is now serving and carrying forward all the good work that her worthy predecessors initiated.

All women students of the University and State College when they matriculate, automatically become members of the "Woman's League." The League operates in social, civic and artistic ways and promotes friendship and an understanding of community welfare. The University is located at Seattle, in the western part of our large state, and the State College is in Pullman, in the eastern section, which, almost, is an empire in itself. While both institutions are coeducational, the flower of Washington womanhood is welcomed in both.

A woman, Mrs. Frederick Bently of Seattle, has been the prime mover in the establishment of a work shop and plant where all kinds of articles from fancy and household brooms to many more diverse things are made. Here the blind are given an opportunity to become self-supporting, and consequently happy. Through donations and the sale of their product, the permanent "Lighthouse" is situated on the water front and is managed and operated solely in the interest of the sightless ones who have, through women's zeal, been given the priceless boon of a place in the world's labor.

One of the splendid accomplishments of Washington women is the Children's Orthopedic Hospital, which was organized in 1907 by a group of society women called together by Mrs. J. W. Clise of Seattle, for the purpose of starting a hospital for crippled children.

A six-bed ward was the beginning of this magnificent work, and it appealed so much to popular interest that the response has been constant. The hospital is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, has no paid officers, but a group of women, largely persons of wealth and influence, give unlimited time and serve to make the hospital what it really is, a Godsend to the state.

From 1400 to 1500 crippled children are treated annually; numbers of them are permanently cured, and there is always a large waiting list. This service is for children under 14 years who are destitute, and the records show that no child who could be benefited has ever been denied help. The area benefited is the entire Northwest and Alaska.

Women and the Winning of the Northwest

By MRS. JAMES S. MCKEE
(Longview, Wash.)

At the moment that mankind's adaptation to environment became conscious, civilization was born and cultures arose. The first great movement in history was the freeing of dominant personalities and their consequent sway over the common man, in autocracy and hierarchy. The second step, slow, painful, hesitating, was the freeing of the common man and the establishing of his right to enter the door of opportunity, pari passu, with the privileged few of the past centuries. This step was not completed until a new world had offered new fields for man's enlargement.

The culture, law, religion, which flowered with that earlier movement, the freeing of the few, crystallized historically as autocracy; that which was the precipitate of the later and wider movement which established the average man as the norm, became democracy in government. It established the principles of "separation of church and state" and "freedom of conscience" in religious polity. "Roman" best describes the autocratic tradition; for want of a more exact term, "Saxon" may be applied to the latter.

In the settlement of the new world, the Roman idea had the advantage of a century's start. The Santa Maria, over and above her ship's manifest, brought an intangible cargo of great potency, the Roman idea, but dressed in its most extreme, mediaeval vestments by absolute Spain. More than a century later came the Mayflower, likewise bringing her intangible freight, the Saxon idea, buttressed by the Common Law and wedded to the Christian Law, in the Doom Book of Alfred, great king of the Saxons.

The impact of the Saxon ideal forced the holders of the Roman law both north and south. The final act saw it settled firmly in the vast middle borders of the continent. All during these fateful centuries there loomed and lured on the northern and western borders unsolved mysteries and undiscovered regions: the River of the West, the Straits of Anian, the Northwest Passage to India and the Spice Isles of the Pacific. To whom should these alluring regions belong? Which culture, which tradition, monarchy or democracy, would prevail in the Land of Sunset? What factor would determine exploration? War? Exploitation? Diplomacy? Pioneer settlement? All, perhaps, helped. There is not space to prove, but only to suggest that the factor which turned the scale in favor of the Stars and Stripes and democracy was the American woman, for where she went, homes were established; homes meant permanent settlement and government, not exploitation and expediency.

If the movement which carried to dominance the Saxon rather than the Roman ideal for North America be examined, it will be found that the deep-rooted and outstanding factor, that differentiated the two streams of colonizing enterprises, lies in this one fact: the Saxon took with him the wife of his own blood and established a home; the Latin man did not. It is needless to point out that had the American woman failed in courage and endurance, she could not have entered into this conquest of these rich regions for America. The result might easily have been other than it was.

But before the pioneers, came the missionaries and with them in 1836, Narcissa Whitman and Eliza Spaulding, the first white women to cross the Rocky Mountains. Previous to this time, the Hudson Bay Company had been monarch of all it surveyed. Eleven times American traders had tried for a foothold and each time finally accepted defeat at the hands of this autocratic corporation. But when the mountain men saw those two white women, they said: "There is something the honorable Hudson Bay Company cannot drive out of this country." And so it was. From that time the tide of autocracy began to ebb. Wave after wave bore forward the hosts of democracy until Oregon, Old Oregon, was safe beneath the Stars and Stripes. On July 4, 1836, these two white women, standing with their husbands on the summit of the Rocky Mountains, with Bible and with Flag, as their diaries tell us, took possession of the Pacific Coast in the name of Christ and for the American Home. In two years more they were joined by Mrs. Cushing Eells and Mrs. Elkanah Walker.

Their first joint activity was to enter into the organization of the Columbia Maternal Association and thus become the founders of the first Woman's Club west of the Rockies and the second to be formed anywhere in the United States. Its preamble closes thus: "We, the subscribers, agree to form ourselves into an association for the purpose of adopting such rules as are best calculated to assist us in the right performance of our maternal duties."

Not only did these first Americans in permanent residence in Old Oregon point the way and prove its practicability, but they gave aid and comfort to those who faced the perils of the way to follow; not only did they stimulate emigration from the East, but they succored it at the journey's end; not only did they urge America to extend her sway over these new regions, but they were the leaders in formulating a provisional government on the American plan. Here, as everywhere, the American home was the first unit of democracy.

Theodore Winthrop said in the Fifties: "These Oregon people carrying to a new and grander New England of the West a fuller growth of the American idea . . . carrying there a religion, two centuries farther on than the crude and cruel Hebraism of the Puritans,—with such materials, that western society, when it crystallizes, will elaborate new systems of life and thought."

Dr. Ellsworth Huntington, in our own day, with scientific imagination has called it "the charmed land," the "new cradle of the blond Aryan." It is the land which has known no flag but the Stars and Stripes—won by American homes.

They will take, they will hold,
By the spade in the mould,
By the seed in the soil,
By the sweat and the toil,
By the plow and the loom,
By the school and the home."

The mountain men were right. The honorable Hudson Bay Company could not drive them back, for they were not pilgrims and strangers; they came as those who sought homes, bringing their Lares and Penates with them.

Women of Wyoming

By Cora M. Beach
(Author and Historian)

The territory of Wyoming was the pioneer commonwealth in the enfranchising of women and the right to hold office incident thereto. This privilege was conferred upon Wyoming women by the first territorial legislature, December 10, 1869. Esther Morris, a Wyoming woman, was directly responsible for the introduction of the bill granting women equal political rights with male citizens. She is known as the Mother of Woman Suffrage. The first general election in which women voted after the passing of this law, was in the fall of 1870. Thus, when Wyoming was admitted to the union in 1890, the constitution of the state embodied the same provision.

In April, 1870, Wyoming women served on both grand and petit juries at Laramie, and later, as petit jurors in other localities of the territory. There was intense excitement and interest when this first jury convened in Laramie and the material facts were telegraphed all over the world by the Associated Press. Later, the general opinion of the Bench and Bar and a majority of the citizens was that the law passed three days prior to that of "female suffrage," which provided that "male citizens" should compose the jury, could not be interpreted to require jury service of women, or that the right to hold office carried with it the right to sit in trial juries. The law has never been amended and the question never directly decided by the Wyoming Supreme Court, Wyoming women having apparently been satisfied for more than fifty years to let the tedious duty of jury service devolve upon their men.

From the passage of the equal suffrage law in 1869, women have been active in the public service of their various communities and in the affairs of the state. They assumed the responsibility of the ballot as a matter of course, along with the duties of their homes, and although the number having sought public office is comparatively small, yet those who have been elected or appointed to office, have almost without exception, fulfilled the duties required of them in a competent, dignified and womanly manner.

To Esther Morris, also, belongs the distinction of being Wyoming's first woman in public office. She was appointed

Justice of the Peace at South Pass City, February 14, 1870. This was the first time in the history of the world that any woman had held judicial office. During her administration, she tried seventy cases, none of which were ever taken to a higher court. A lawyer practicing in her court said, "Although her decisions were by no means popular, they were regarded as just."

Likewise, the first woman in the world to serve as bailiff of a court was Mary Symons-Boies-Atkinson, of Laramie, who served in this capacity during the entire sessions of the grand and petit juries at Laramie in 1870.

Wyoming also claims the honor of having the first woman voter in a general election—Mrs. Eliza A. Swain, "a gentle, white-haired housewife, Quakerish in appearance", who was a great favorite in the town of Laramie. She was en route to a neighbor's for yeast and stopped in early at the polls. Those in charge thought that because of her interest, her age and her early arrival that it would be a great honor to bestow on her, should they allow her to be the first voter. The opinion being unanimous, the polls were opened earlier than the hour set and she cast the first ballot. Those interested afterwards made investigation while there were still living many persons who had participated in the elections throughout the territory and the evidence secured confirmed the statements of the Laramie election officials.

The record of Wyoming women in public office is a splendid one—in many instances they have been the first to serve in their individual offices in the United States, and in this connection, we mention Governor Nellie Tayloe Ross, the first woman Governor of Wyoming as well as of the United States.

Wyoming and the Rocky Mountain west has been termed "the last frontier", so the women of Wyoming can well be termed "pioneers", as many of the generation that settled the country and helped to make it safe from the depredations of the Indians and outlaws, still live there, and the memory of many more is fresh in the minds of the people of Wyoming, who have ever given to their women full credit for their part in making it one of the most progressive of our states, "Out Where the West Begins."

Politician or Diplomatist?

By GRACE RAYMOND HEBARD
(University of Wyoming)

The peaceful operation and the universal recognition of the XIX Amendment of our Constitution no longer commands the attention of the public. The hectic days of platform oratory are of the past. Universal suffrage has successfully met the challenge and women have adjusted themselves to the right of franchise more universally and intelligently than the most sanguine of supporters of woman suffrage had dared to hope.

Yet in face of these facts, it might be of interest to hear of the initial event, be it of a politican or diplomatist, that gave to the women of the Territory of Wyoming the right to vote, for it was in that territory at its first legislature in 1869 that unlimited franchise came to the women of Wyoming.

During the early days of the operation of the Union Pacific Railway into the West there came to Wyoming, from Peru, Illinois, a mother with husband and three sons. Wyoming was then largely an unknown and untried western frontier. The frontier woman's destination, South Pass City, was to be reached only by stage after leaving the railroad. To this gold mining camp situated in the thin fringe of civilization in the early days of the year 1869, came Esther Hobart Morris, bringing with her a breath of freedom, democracy and equality, her inspiration largely based on the eloquent and forceful appeals made by Susan B. Anthony for "equal suffrage." These convincing appeals had been heard and absorbed by Mrs. Morris after hearing Mrs. Anthony in New York and Illinois.

Into this remote mining camp of South Pass, hundreds of miles removed from railroads, surrounded by the crafty redmen, the highway robber, and the howling wolves and crying coyotes, came "the mother of woman suffrage for Wyoming." Mrs. Morris had an original style and out of the common order of conversational speech. Her son once said that his mother's abundant store of genial wit carried her through many a trying situation; she had courage to do what would have been easier to avoid; she scorned the static position adopted by the average woman; she was dynamic; she talked plain Anglo-Saxon—so easy of understanding.

In this typical mining camp were a handful of those people who enjoyed and relished conversation around the snapping pine-knot open fire of the log cabin of Mrs. Morris, discussions and debates on questions that gave to Mrs. Morris the inspiration that grew from a dream into a reality, that of the franchise of women.

In September, 1869, there was to be held in the mountain city of South Pass an election for members to the Territorial Legislature. A few days prior to this election, Mrs. Morris gave a dinner at her home, the table filled with wild game and relishes personally prepared. To this feast were bidden forty men and women. Among these guests were Captain William Bright from Maryland and Captain Herman G. Nickerson, opposing officers in the Civil War, and both candidates for the same legislative position in the Territorial Senate. After the repast, while lingering around the unemptied table, Mrs. Morris arose, confessing to the strategy of the gathering. "There are present," she ventured to state, "two opposing candidates for the first legislature of our new Territory, one of whom is soon to be elected, and we desire here and now to receive from them a public pledge that whosoever is elected will introduce and work for the passage of an act conferring upon the women of our new Territory the right of suffrage."

Both of the candidates solemnly pledged themselves to the request, receiving the applause of all present. There were no Republicans elected anywhere in new Wyoming at the first election, the Democrat, Colonel Bright, being the choice of the people.

True to his promise, William Bright introduced a bill in the Legislature in October, 1869, a bill which became a law on December 10th, granting to Wyoming women "equal suffrage," a right which has continued to them from that date to the present day. Thus Wyoming became the first state or commonwealth in the world to grant to women unrestricted franchise.

Was the toothsome dinner the psychological cause of the final result, or was the ultimate outcome of the appeal for suffrage due to the eloquence of the hostess? Was Mrs. Morris a diplomat or a politician?

The Women of Tacoma

By ALICE D. ENGLEY BEEK
(Painter, Writer and Lecturer)

When I came to live in the State of Washington, it was after a youth spent in New England and many years of study in Europe. I turned my face to the West with the spirit of the pioneer—a heritage, perhaps, from my Mayflower ancestors. Just what primitive conditions I expected to await me, is still vague in my mind. I found a state that was young and undeveloped, it is true, but struggling to attain high ideals—many of which have been realized.

The women of Washington are largely cosmopolitan, as most of them were born and educated in other sections of the country. They are progressive women, interested in a wide range of subjects and always ready to extend a helping hand to those in need. Foremost in their minds is the home, the care and development of their children and the betterment of civic and political conditions. Appreciation for educational advancement is shown by their activity in literary and civic clubs and by their interest in the trend of current events. This is true of all parts of the state, I believe.

My own city, Tacoma, has many gifted women, some occupying important professional positions—others doing creditable creative work. The interest in music and dramatic art is most enthusiastic. Musical organizations and our Drama League do much to stimulate both. We are privileged to hear many of the world's great musicians and lecturers.

While observing with pride the progress of my state in allied fields of endeavor, I consider myself more ably qualified to write upon the subject of painting; and it is here where we particularly realize our limitations. Seattle, with her greater size and wealth, has more to offer. In a young city, the struggle for material existence is too urgent—too absorbing—to allow for much development of the ideal. In the founding of all nations and cities, the necessities have come first, only followed by the refinements when the constructional period was past. Tacoma could be no exception. We have imbibed of the beauties of art from older nations and from other cities; but what of our children, brought up and educated in this new part of our country?

It was because we realized just what the lack of this refining influence might mean to their future, that the women of the Aloha Club, Tacoma, have for nearly twenty years appropriated a generous part of their annual budget to the cause of art appreciation in our schools. The pupils do not know how to study pictures without guidance; therefore, art talks illustrated by reproductions or slides, have always formed a part of the Aloha art exhibits.

The first picture in any of our city schools was given by an Aloha member, and in the beginning, many originals and reproductions were presented to schools by the club. This movement was given even greater impetus by teachers and pupils, and thru their untiring efforts, these gifts were made the nucleus around which many notable collections were gathered. The Stadium High School of Tacoma now owns pictures valued at ten thousand dollars. Visitors to our city have greatly admired so enterprising an achievement. Two Aloha collections are constantly being circulated in the schools.

Thus, we are endeavoring to make up to our children for what they now lack; while we rejoice in the rich heritage that is theirs, as future citizens of this great and glorious Northwest. Here, where Nature and Opportunity go hand in hand to make life worth living, we feel that their future is secure.

The Western Woman—Her Opportunity

By DR. AURELIA HENRY REINHARDT
(President of Mills College)

A new country gives freely the blessing of opportunity to the pioneers who venture to build there a new civilization. The dead hand of worn-out methods of work and lifeless traditions does not of itself stretch across wide seas or high mountains. A new country makes possible new experiments and fresh undertakings, encourages initiation and individuality of expression in men and women alike.

The chance to develop freely and fairly has belonged to the California woman from the day the first covered wagon deposited her and her little belongings at the new mining claim, or on the just-registered quarter section of land. Her opportunity has meant a busy and varied life; it has meant hard work in the house, on the farm, and in the shop. But these tasks gave her muscle and confidence. They gave the men of the West also confidence in her ability and pride in her achievement, and as California built up its institutions, California women worked side by side with the men of the state.

As public schools were opened, girls as pupils were welcome from the first as well as boys. When the colleges were founded, an institution for women was one of the first to be organized. When the State University came into being, women students soon had their places, and today half the students of college and university age in the state are women. Women teachers are found in educational institutions of every type.

Earlier than most states, California admitted women to her colleges of medicine and law, with the result that these professions have their quota of distinguished women.

The inspiration of a new land drew women into the fields of art. In astonishing numbers singers, painters, writers of talent interpreted the new world in color and verse, in prose story, and in song.

When the participation of women in government became a subject of discussion in America, years before the Federal Constitution added the Nineteenth Amendment, California had granted suffrage to women, and women prepared for the task sat in the state legislature and worked among the supervisors of city and county government.

The achievement of California women remains a noble example and incentive to the girlhood of today. In this era where food, clothing, and shelter are more economically and excellently prepared outside the individual home, girlhood has the greatest leisure as well as opportunity to use mind and hand for a life of wide usefulness and unselfish happiness.
